Lone Woman Winging Way Over Atlantic To New York

Beryl Markham Braves Squalls in Light Ship Lacking a Radio.

Success Will Make Flier First of Sex

Young English Woman Believes in Future of Ocean Plane Line.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Abingdon Airdrome, Berkshire, England, Sept. 4.—Mrs. Beryl Markham, 33-year-old mother, tonight soared over a squally Atlantic Ocean in her attempt to be the first woman to fly from England to New York.

The blonde society woman left her 7-year-old son at home and took off from the Royal Air Force airdrome here at 6:50 p. m. (12:50 a. m., Eastern standard time) in the face of weather forecasts of a gusty, but moonlit, ocean. She said she hoped to be in New York within 20 or 24 hours.

Her turquoise-blue plane, a stock model, carried 260 gallons of gas and no radio equipment. Thus, the only news of her progress over the ocean must come from ships at sea which might sight her plane, marked "VP-KCC."

Her take-off was unostentatious, with only a few friends on the field to bid her adieu on her hazardous venture in her comparatively light ship, named The Messenger.

She wore a light gray jumper and gray flannel trousers, and on her head was a jaunty white hat. Calmly she stepped into the ship, took off and disappeared into the dusk. In the ship's cabin were a jug of coffee and a package of fruit and nuts—her only food and drink.

She told friends she expected to average about 158 miles an hour on the 3,450-mile flight.

Waited Four Days.

She had waited for four days for favorable weather and then started in the face of adverse conditions which Harry Richman, the singer who with Dick Merrill flew from New York to Wales the day before, said he "shouldn't like to face myself."

"I don't think she'll get far with a light plane," said Richman who, with Merrill, made a record-speed crossing in a ship that cost $100,000. "I wish she had talked to me before taking off because I had a report from the United States Weather Bureau about a hurricane off Bermuda."

Richman and Merrill said they would wait for more favorable weather before returning to New York.

Mrs. Markham tonight was essaying what no woman—and few men—have accomplished.

Amelia Earhart Putnam, the American aviatrix, flew the Atlantic from west to east alone, and Amy Mollison crossed from Wales to Connecticut with her husband in 1933. But no woman has ever flown from England to New York alone.

To Fly Over Graves of Two.

Mrs. Markham will fly over the ocean graves of two other women who failed in East-West attempts. They were the Hon. Elsie Mackay and Princess Lowenstein-Wertheim.

Her ship, a single-engined, low-wing monoplane, has a cruising range of about 4,000 miles.

"I believe in the future of an Atlantic air service," she said before taking off, "and I want to be in on it—at the beginning."

She is the sister-in-law of Sir Charles Markham, colliery baronet.

Tall and athletic-looking, Mrs. Markham maintained a vigorous training schedule in preparation for the flight.

"I have had the Atlantic flight in mind for some time," she said. "When the chance to do it was given me by a Kenya syndicate interested in aviation. They are backing me right through."

Grew Up in Kenya.

She grew up in Kenya, she explained.

Mrs. Markham has been flying since 1931, when she soloed after only 8 hours' instruction. Later she made a solo flight to England from Kenya Colony in seven flying days, after she had flown only 100 hours previously. She has known dangers of flying before this. On her first flight to England from Africa she was forced down in a jungle, but pushed on until she reached Heston field and stepped out with the remark:

"I have flown alone from Nairobi."

In 1932, while touring the continent by air, she narrowly escaped death when her ship crashed into a German ditch.

Aviation Spotlight on Two Women

MRS. BERYL MARKHAM, an attractive blonde English society woman, mother of a 7-year-old boy, yesterday took off alone at Abington, England, on a transatlantic flight to New York.

MRS. LOUISE THADEN, fuzzy-haired attractive Department of Commerce employe, formerly of Arkansas, triumphed over the best of the men fliers last night when she won the Bendix Air Derby.

D. C. Woman Wins Bendix Race Over Nation's Foremost Fliers

Mrs. Louise Thaden, of Commerce Department, Sets N. Y.-to-Los Angeles Record for Women; Two Hurt in Crash; 'Chute Jumper Dies.

Curly-haired Louise McPhetridge Thaden, of Washington, yesterday outflew some of the country's foremost men and women pilots to win America's greatest long-distance flying prize—the Bendix Trophy race from New York to Los Angeles.

Mrs. Thaden, mother of two children, was the first of her sex to triumph in the race, and her time—14 hours and 54 minutes—was the best ever made by a woman.

The ocean-to-ocean derby was not without its tragedy.

Benny Howard, of Chicago, and his wife, Maxine, were near death at Crown Point, N. Mex., following the crash of "Mr. Mulligan," the plane in which Howard won the Bendix trophy last year. They were leading yesterday when they crashed.

Joe Jacobson, Kansas City entry, jumped to safety when his plane exploded near Stafford, Kans.

L. C. Faulkner, professional parachute jumper, was killed at the Los Angeles airport in view of the crowd gathered for the race. His 'chute failed to open.

Federal Credit Best in History, Roosevelt Says

'Integrated Economy' Plea Also Made in Talks at Springfield, Ill.

By Franklyn Waltman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 4.—A plea for an "integrated economy" that ties in every section of the Nation with the other, and a defense of the national credit as on a "sounder basis than ever before in all history," were uttered here today in two brief speeches by President Roosevelt, homeward bound from his inspection of the drought areas.

The President came here this afternoon, after dedicating a bridge across the Mississippi River, at Hannibal, Mo., to discuss drought relief needs with officials of Illinois and Chicago. He was warmly cheered wherever he stopped throughout the day.

Mr. Roosevelt made his plea for an "integrated economy" from the front portico of the executive mansion, after he had conferred with Gov. Henry Horner, Mayor Edward Kelly of Chicago, and other Illinoisans, before 4,000 wildly cheering Democrats, who trampled down the flowers on the executive mansion grounds in order to glimpse the President.

The crowd waited several hours while the President conducted his conferences in the mansion and finally commenced singing, to the tune of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," a chant which began: "Yes, we're going to vote for Roosevelt, for his truth goes marching on." Subsequently when the President

Landon Tours Drought Zone Of Own State

Candidate Ends His Trip in Cloudburst; Goes to Wichita Monday.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 4.—A two-day motor trip to a drought conference with President Roosevelt closed for Gov. Alf M. Landon late today in a cloudburst that sent torrents of water and silt across the highway he traveled.

For nearly 50 of the 66 miles between Atchison—where he stopped for lunch after a personal inspection of northeast Kansas drought conditions—and Topeka, the Republican Presidential nominee rode through a driving rain that flooded lowlands and gulleys, and left water inches deep for yards along the concrete highway.

He said the rain was too late, however, to benefit the orchards he visited this morning.

Landon reached Topeka at 5 p. m. (6 p. m. Eastern standard time) after 567 miles of driving since early Thursday. Before leaving Atchison, where he lunched, the Governor chatted with Ed Howe, 83-year-old publisher of the Atchison Globe, who is widely known as "the Sage of Potato Hill"

The veteran editor told Landon the Presidential campaign was "settled now" in his favor.

"That's certainly good news," Landon replied.

The Kansan also made an inspection visit to the State Orphan Home at Atchison. With Mrs. Grace Axton,

Labor Rebels Await A. F. L. Midnight Ban

'Zero Hour Is Already Here,' Lewis Asserts, Puffing Cigar.

Mine Head Unworried; Pledges Hands Off Craft Unions.

By Robert C. Albright.

Defying to the end an American Federation of Labor order to disband or accept suspension by midnight tonight, a group of ten insurgent union leaders yesterday went forward with plans for independent organization of mass production industries.

Big, bluff John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and head of the rebel Committee for Industrial Organization, puffed away calmly at a cigar as the hour approached which will signalize the first serious parting of the ways in the ranks of organized labor. Automatically, 1,100,000 workers will be severed from A. F. of L. membership.

"I assume we will be out of the American Federation of Labor by tonight," observed the heavy-maned Lewis to newspapermen here yesterday. Glancing at the clock, he added, "So far as I am concerned, the zero hour is right now—22 minutes to 4."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, nd chairman of the executive council which issued the suspension ultimatum, had nothing to say. But he called a press conferences for 11 a. m. today.

Green is a member of the United Mine Workers, and ironically owes his office in the federation to the organization ordered suspended for rebellion. When the order takes effect, a question will arise as to his official status in the federation. Assumption is he will take membership in some other union.

Won't Talk on Future.

Meanwhile, the unruffled Lewis puffed his cigar. On the wall behind his desk, as he smoked and chatted, was the United Mine Workers' charter in the A. F. of L. He answered all questions, and hedged only on one: "Do you plan to organize a new labor movement, rival to the federation."

"If a group of inhabitants are driven out of a city, and the gates are locked, one can only assume that they will work together to protest themselves from the wild beasts of the forests," he answered.

Then he added, laconically:

"And we are being scourged out through the gates."

The C. I. O. leader denied his organization has any present plans to "disturb" the craft unions forming the basis of American Federation of Labor membership.

"We are going to continue what ws have been doing—organization or unorganized industries. There will be no change in policy and no

Ball Game Reward Of Boy Who Gave Blood to Another

Chicago, Sept. 4 (U.P.).—Maurice Oldham, young Kentuckian, who lacks only a goatee to make him the prototype of Southern chivalry, is going to see his first big league baseball game tomorrow.

Maurice is 13 years old, and the ball game is to be his immediate reward for contributing 125 centimeters of blood to another youngster—Philip Levitt, 7-year-old victim of a rare blood infection.

Of hundreds who volunteered to help Philip in his fight on the dread streptococcus veridans, only Maurice's blood was considered by physicians to be "just right." He suffered 13 months with the disease, from which few recover.

Maurice, son of R. Mack Oldham, Lexington, Ky., city commissioner, came to Chicago yesterday with his mother, and last night the blood transfusion was accomplished. Another will be made in a week.

When Philip's emotion-choked father asked him what Maurice wanted most, he said:

"I'd like to see a real big league baseball game, suh."

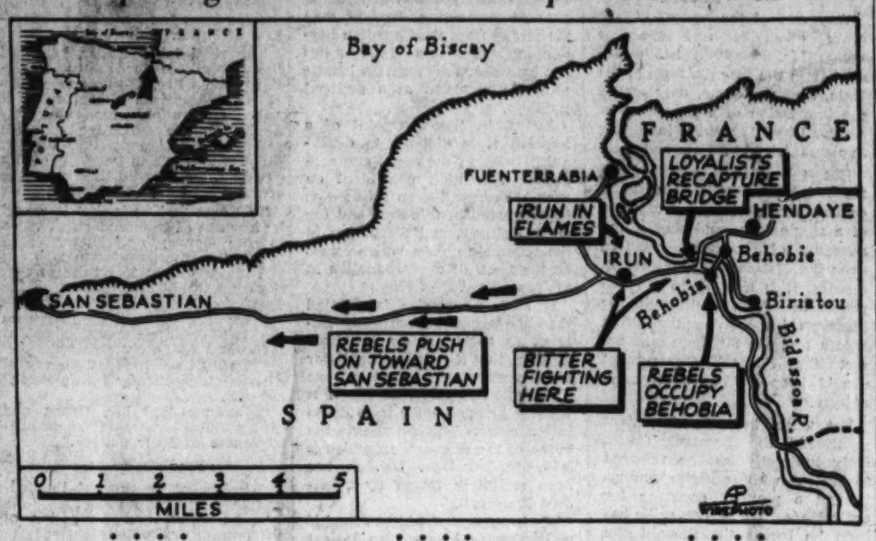
Irun Aflame, Hundreds Dead, Victorious Insurgent Forces Press Toward San Sebastian

Depicting Latest Advances in Spain's Civil War



Fire Sweeps Entire City After Siege Lasting for 7 Weeks.

Fleeing Loyalists Shoot Prisoners

Blast Roads in Attempt to Halt Rebels' Drive; Refugese Escape.

Spanish Revolution.

The rebel-captured City of Irun was in flames last night as the insurgent army, "mopping up" after the smashing victory that climaxed its long siege of the seaport, drove on toward San Sebastian, 8 miles away, on the heels of fleeing loyalists. The government forces dynamited roads to hamper pursuit. The fire covered an area estimated at five square miles.

At Madrid a new cabinet formed under Premier Francisco Largo Caballero included Communists for the first time as the embattled government bid for "maximum weight with the working classes." Jose Giral Pereira, retiring premier, remains as a minister without portfolio.

More Than 100,000 Radicals in Paris paraded in protest against France's embargo on arms to Spain. They demanded aid for the loyalist government.

At Rome it was reported three 6,000-ton cruisers have sailed to Spain in the wake of the cruiser Pola, dispatched to Barcelona after the reported killing of an Italian worker in that government-held city.

Rebels Seize Irun.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press

Hendaye, France, Sept. 4.—The City of Irun tonight was in flames which drove its rebel conquerers out to join their comrades heading toward government-held San Sebastian, 8 miles away.

The entire five square miles of the city was a mass of flames, which consumed the unestimated number of bodies of those who had been killed in the seven-weeks' siege of the coastal city.

In the night a small band of government defenders held out at the head of the international bridge into France to keep the entrance open long enough for the last civilian refugees to flee to safety.

Roads Are Dynamited.

Government forces falling back toward San Sebastian dynamited roads and set fire to everything which might aid the rebel advance. [The United Press reported government-held San Sebastian was panic-stricken as a rebel attack appeared imminent. Word spread through the city that its defenders lacked munitions. Hospitals were being evacuated.—Editor's Note.]

The government militiamen holding the Irun bridgehead fought desperately with a railway car full of ammunition on tracks beside them.

The munitions had arrived at Hendaye from Barcelona today, brought over the French railway under a long-standing international agreement between France and Spain.

When the Spanish government militiamen recaptured the bridgehead they asked the French to shuttle the car as far as the Spanish customs house on their side, where they pried it open and helped themselves to the ammunition.

Defenders Flee.

Those of the government defenders still alive after the two days of hand-to-hand fighting, scattered before the grenade-hurling victorious rebels.

Some fled over the international bridges into France; others sped toward San Sebastian.

The flames, which could be seen from the French side of the frontier, licked up the crumbling walls and tinted the red-and-gold monarchial banners raised by the rebels.

Hundreds of bodies were sprawled along the river bank path of the two-day battle, but how many hundred had been killed within the city no one professed to know.

Prisoners Are Shot.

Refugees and deserters told of the government defenders shooting prisoners on the spot before they fled the doomed city. Others crossing into France said the major part of the 500 prisoners had been loaded into vans and rushed to San Se-

Caballero Includes 2 Communists in Cabinet; Rebel Sympathy Cuts Embassy's Staff Here to 3

New Government Designed to Press War Vigorously and Solidify Support of the Masses,

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 4.—Communists were included for the first time in a Spanish cabinet formed tonight to rally support of the working classes in the war crisis.

Alarmed by the "grave situation of the civil war," President Manuel Azana called 65-year-old Francisco Largo Caballero, a powerful Socialist-Extremist leader since the overthrow of the monarchy in 1931, to form a new cabinet.

Largo Caballero became premier and minister of war. Jose Giral Pereira, the resigning prime minister, remained in the cabinet without portfolio.

Six of the 14 ministries were headed by Socialists and two by Communists. Although neither syndicalists nor anarchists, both often critical of the government's civil war methods, were given posts, Olivares Quits Post in Washington; Says He's for 'the Other Side;' Franco Status Doubtful.

By the Associated Press.

Wholesale resignations by secretaries and attaches last night had reduced Spanish Ambassador Don Luis Calderon's official staff in Washington to three—and it was doubtful if one of these still possessed his diplomatic status.

A normal Embassy personnel of eight has shrunk, aids of the ambassador disclosed, to a staff composed only of a military attache, an air attache, and a commercial attache.

The remainder either have formally tendered their resignations or just disappeared in the last few weeks as a result of the revolution in their country.

Calderon's principal assistant, First Secretary Don Luis de Olivares, announced his resignation yesterday with the statement:

"I am a true Spaniard. My sympathies are with

Reserve Banks' Earnings Less Than Dividends

Unfavorable Balance Laid to Low Interest Yield on Securities of U.S.

Earnings of the 12 Federal Reserve Banks during the first half of 1936, failed by a narrow margin to cover dividend payments, due largely to low interest rates on Government securities, it developed yesterday.

The September Federal Reserve Bulletin disclosed net earnings of the 12 banks during the six-month period amounted to only $3,277,988, as against $3,921,346 paid out in dividends.

Treasury officials were hopeful the trend for the last six months of the year would more than offset this earnings deficiency of $743,348. If the trend continues, it will mark the first time since 1924 the banks' earnings have failed to cover dividends.

Government securities constitute the bulk of the banks' holdings, and most of the large increase in loans and investments in the past few years has been in Government obligations. Nevertheless, earnings from Government securities in the first six months of 1936 were but $17,615,195, a drop of $3,170,000 under the same period of 1935. In the 1935 half-year period, the banks earned nearly $3,000,000 in excess of dividends.

Interest at Record Low.

Interest rates on Government securities for many months have been at the lowest level in the history of Treasury financing, and to these low rates officials attributed the failure to cover dividends.

A table appearing in the Federal Reserve bulletin disclosed that all but 2 of the 12 Federal Reserve banks failed to earn enough to cover the 6 per cent annual divi-

Convict Is Stabbed In U.S. Prison Fray

Atlanta, Sept. 4 (U.P.).—The fourth knife affray in the Federal penitentiary here in less than 11 months tonight sent Nicholas Chusamo, 26, convicted counterfeiter, to the hospital with serious stabs wounds.

Officials sequestered Elmer B. Pickens, a prisoner quartered in the same cell block with Chusamo.

The blade of a pair of scissors penetrated the front of Chusamo's chest, prison officials said.

Chusamo is serving a five-year term upon conviction in New York for counterfeiting. Pickens, of Florence, Ala., is serving a life term for kidnaping and bank robbery.

Assistant United States District Attorney Neil Andrews began an immediate investigation.

Reporter Sees Moors Mop Up 'Bloody Irun'

Trapped in City, He Shares in Insurgents Final Charge, Victory.

By Edward G. Depury.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Irun, Sept. 4.—I got behind a tank today, between two waves of rebel storm troops, and charged into Irun to see the city fall.

Rebel commanders entrusted this final assault to the Moors—those fierce fighters who are so scornful of death that they never have bothered to take off their white turbans and put on steel helmets.

We didn't make very fast progress when we hit the edge of the town because the Moors had some bloody business to do. They gave no quarter, and the attack paused now and then to give them time to kill the enemy wounded. Sometimes they did it with knives; sometimes with bullets.

The attack went in waves. The first wave left a loyalist militiaman crumpled in the street. Every wave of Moors that went by him shot him to make sure that he was dead. When I came to his body there were 20 wounds in it.

Estimates 2,000 Slain.

It took the Moors four hours to capture Irun and do their bloody mopping up. The slaughter was heavy—I think 2,000 men must have been killed today—but it would have been much worse if the loyalists had not fled after scattered re-

Senate Sifting Michigan Talk Of Slush Fund

Chairman Lonergan Acts on Complaint of $3,000,000 Political Purse.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Sept. 4.—Louis R. Glavis, chief investigator of the Senate committee on campaign expenditures, began an investigation here today of charges that a fund of approximately $3,000,000 had been accumulated for use in the election campaign in Michigan.

Glavis, with a staff of assistants, had the inquiry actually under way before Senator Augustine Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut, chairman of the committee, disclosed in Washington that it had been ordered. Glavis came here from Pennsylvania, where a similar investigation has been ordered. He declined to discuss his assignment here, saying, "I never talk."

The investigation, coming less than a fortnight before Michigan's primary election, brought a statement from Frank Murphy, High Commissioner of the Philippines, who is seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, that while money was being spent to defeat him, "the really big expenditures are being made" in the Republican Party to defeat Senator James Couzens.

Couzens, a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket, a fortnight ago announced his inten-

100,000 Frenchmen Demand Spanish Arms Ban Be Lifted

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Sept. 4.—More than 100,000 marching Parisians, vociferously demanding "guns and planes for Spain," tonight added to the pressure on the French government to lift its arms embargo against Spain.

The militant demonstration heaped fuel on the heated demands for help for Madrid government, which followed immediately on news of a rebel victory at Irun.

Communists exhorted Socialist supporters of Premier Leon Blum to combine forces with them in a demand that the government withdraw its "blockade" against the Spanish Popular Front.

Maurice Thorez, Communist leader and center of the mass meeting, charged "foreign fascists are continuing to arm the Spanish rebels," and insisted France abandon its "hands off" policy in Spain.

In a letter to the Socialist Executive Committee, Thorez cited the protest of the Spanish government against alleged delivery of 24 new Italian planes to the rebels. He said it confirmed "the tragedy caused in Spain by a blockade contrary to the most elementary rules of international law."

Before going to lead the demonstration, Thorez proposed Communists and Socialist appeal jointly to Blum "to raise the blockade as fatal to the cause of republican Spain and the cause of liberty and peace."

Although the premier was expected to keep the Socialists in line behind his pledge of non-intervention, the Communists' agitation led political observers to foresee the possibility of a crack-up in the French People's Front.

The leftist mass meeting was called as a celebration of "solidarity" on the sixty-sixth anniversary of the founding of the French republic, but it was turned into a vigorous expression of sympathy for Spanish Socialists against the insurrection.

Secret of Tri-Dimensional Photos Revealed As Inventor Sees Industries Revolutionized

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

New York, Sept. 4.—A picture of an old man in his shirt sleeves glittered in natural color on the desk of Douglas F. Winnek, 29-year-old Madison (Wis.) photographic engineer. The picture seemed to be a frame through which one was looking at a live human being. Suddenly Winnek picked it up, and the man in the picture seemed to move. An observer could see around the man and look at the scenery in the background. The likeness was round and full and the 8-by-10 photograph had actual depth. Winnek laughed and explained:

"This is the first 'trivision' photograph having three dimensions ever made."

Winnek demonstrated a series of "trivision" photographs tonight, saying he expected the principle to revolutionize motion pictures, photography, roentgenology, television and graphic printing.

The technique employed—use of cellulose acetate plates embossed with 300 ridges to the inch—will enable each of these fields to adopt pictures showing depth just as realistically as an actual scene, Winnek said, and the cost is exceptionally low.

Winnek describes his process as follows:

The eyes see two pictures in any object, but the brain co-ordinates these, giving the sense of depth. In photography, only one picture can be shown by the old process, resulting in a flat impression. The new process is simply a method of presenting two pictures to the eyes.

This is accomplished through grooving the negative of the film. These grooves are so minute as to be invisible, and are the secret of the entire process. Each grove serves as a tiny lens which breaks the single image into two parts. The completed negative then becomes a mass of tiny two-section pictures.

The negative is developed on cellulose acetate plates also grooved. These grooves retain the panoramic pictures. When seen from any angle, the apparently smooth stereoscope or print resolves itself into a separate picture for each eye, and presents, a soft, rounded view.

Winnek said that in graphic printing the negatives would be developed on bronze plates, and the picture rolled off paper embossed with grooves, and varnished. The full-depth trivision pictures would be immediately practicable for books and magazines where finer grades of paper are used, he said.

In motion pictures, trivision movies could be made possible through the use of embossed film and projection on an embossed screen made of cellulose acetate. In television, a set would scan a picture through an embossed screen, broadcast it and receive a similar picture through an embossed televisor.

The invention has been the result of five years of experimentation. Motion picture companies are studying its possibilities, and a large publishing house is considering adopting it for magazine work. Winnek saw its immediate application in display and window advertising, with gradual extension to other fields as a few remaining difficulties are solved.

Federal Credit Best in History, Roosevelt Says

Crowd of 10,000 Cheers President's Statement at Springfield, Ill.

appeared on the arm of Gov. Horner the crowd alternated these words with a refrain containing the name of "Horner."

"That is a wonderful bit of harmony," asserted the Governor.

With his words frequently punctuated with the cheers of the crowd, the President reiterated the thesis which he has preached throughout this trip, namely, the interdependence of all parts of the country.

He declared that while "we can not prevent drought," the country at least could offer its farm economy "in such a way that we will have less shortage of water in the future after it comes out of the Heavens and, also that we will have better soil."

Call for Planning.

"All of these things," he added, "call for planning and the interesting thing to me is that the people in the very large cities, in the manufacturing centers, are beginning to understand that the problem of the farmer directly affects them in their manufacturing employment."

He went on to explain that if the purchasing power of the farmers were lessened it meant less work for the people who work in factories.

If the people in the cities, he asserted, could be kept busy "at better wages—not good wages but better wages—it means that they will have more to buy beef and pork and lots of other things."

This was an "integrated economy," the President asserted, adding that the country was becoming conscious of the necessity for a closer co-ordination between sections.

Becoming Nationalistic.

He contended that the country was "becoming nationalistic in the best sense of the word and not in the exclusive sense of the word." He paused to explain that "we don't want to build a wall around ourselves and have no trade with any other nation in the World," and asserted that the country was achieving a "national point of view in that we are appreciating in each section the problems of all the other sections."

Several hours earlier, on his arrival in the city, the President, from the rear platform of his train, made his defense of the national credit as sound. There remarks, delivered to 10,000 persons jammed around the railroad station, were accompanied with a touch of the political showmanship in which the Preisdent excels.

Crowd Cheers Him.

The touch of political showmanship which accompanied this was staged with the help of a half dozen linemen from the telephone company. As the President's special train halted in Springfield, with 10,000 men and women intently gazing on it, the linemen hastily strung wires from a nearby pole to Mr. Roosevelt's special car and handed a telephone through a window. There was a delay of five minutes.

When the President appeared, drawing a mighty roar from the crowd, he explained he had just been talking over the telephone with Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau in Washington regarding new Federal financing.

"I might add," asserted the President, "that the obligations of the United States Government are today on a sounder basis of credit than ever before in all history."

The crowd again roared its approval.

Mr. Roosevelt then left his train, motored amid lines of cheering spectators through Springfield to Lincoln's tomb, where his military aid, Col. E. M. Watson, laid a wreath, and then on to the house in which Lincoln lived for 17 years before he became President. There the presidential party paused for a moment in homage and then moved on to the executive mansion, where Mr. Roosevelt had luncheon as the guest of Gov. Henry Horner.

Confers With Officials.

Subsequently, the President conferred with Illinois and Chicago officials regarding the drought and general relief situation. Tonight the President entertained Gov. Horner at dinner aboard his train, leaving later for Indianapolis, where he will confer with Indiana officials tomorrow.

Earlier in the day Mr. Roosevelt dedicated a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hannibal, Mo., the home of Mark Twain. Emphasizing that the new steel $1,000,000 span, joining Illinois and Missouri, was a result of co-operation between the Federal Government, two States and the city of Hannibal, the President devoted most of his speech there to reminiscences of Mark Twain.

At the bridge dedication, which took place before approximately 20,000 persons, who crowded the surrounding hillsides, the President heard Gov. Horner compare him to the Great Emancipator and describe him as "one who has distinguished himself as one of our greatest Presidents."

Throughout the day, at Hannibal, Mo., along the Illinois countryside on an 18-mile ride to Barry, Ill., then at Jacksonville, Ill., and in Springfield, huge crowds cheered the President. Not only was an immense crowd gathered at the bridge dedication in Hannibal but the streets of the town were lined with persons four and five deep to see Mr. Roosevelt.

No plans had been made for the President to speak at Jacksonville where his train already was 45 minutes behnid schedule, but so large and enthusiastic was the crowd that Mr. Roosevelt spoke several minutes. The local Democrats brought out a band and the crowd enthusiastically shrilled its appreciation of the President and Gov. Horner.

Reiterates Contention.

The President reiterated his contention of the dependence of one part of the country on the others. He explained that the prosperity of the steel workers depended on the welfare of the wheat growers and cattlemen and the prosperity of the latter depended on the welfare of the Southern cotton planters.

Co-operation among all parts of the Nation and a better understanding between city and farm represented the spirit and the objective he was seeking to promulgate, Mr. Roosevelt asserted.

"Yes, it is going to take planning," he said. "But I am not afraid of planning. If we had started planning generations ago, we would have been spared some of our present troubles.

"Yes, prosperity is coming back but we wish to make sure that it will last longer than overnight. Meanwhile, I hope to be able to come back to see you again, say, before November 3." It was the first time on this "nonpolitical" trip that Mr. Roosevelt publicly recognized that November 3, election day, held a special significance for him.

Passes Through Kinderhook.

On the motor ride from Hannibal, Mo., across the newly dedicated bridge to Barry, Ill., the Presidential party passed through the small town of Kinderhook. There the citizens had erected a huge sign bearing the words: "Kinderhook—Home of Dan Bell." The "Dan Bell" mentioned is Daniel Bell, acting Director of the Budget. In the middle of the town a smaller sign, reading "Home of Dan Bell" was nailed across the front of a building now known as "Dew Drop Inn," a tearoom. The President's car slackened its speed and Mr. Roosevelt gaily waved his hat at the townsfolk.

A colorful aspect of the President's visit in Illinois was that it brought together, at the luncheon table, Gov. Horner and Mayor Kelly of Chicago, who bitterly fought each other in the recent Illinois Democratic primary. Mayor Kelly and his Cook County Democratic organization supported Dr. Herman N. Bundesen for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination against Gov. Horner.

The campaign became bitter, resulting, however, in the renomination of Gov. Horner. Since that time the Chicago mayor and the Governor have avoided each other as much as possible, although some time ago they went through the motions of making peace at a harmony meeting.

Both Gov. Horner and Mayor Kelly joined the Presidential party at Barry, Ill. Subsequently, Mayor Kelly was one of the guests at the luncheon for the President, the latter sitting between the Governor and the Chicago mayor.

Morgenthau Is Silent.

Secretary Morgenthau was silent yesterday regarding his telephone conversation with President Roosevelt, but financial quarters assumed it dealt with terms of the Treasury's mid-September financing.

Morgenthau has announced he would seek $400,000,000 of new money on September 15, in addition to refinancing $514,000,000 of outstanding 1.5 per cent notes, which mature on that date.

What type of securities will be issued, the interest rate and other details have not been made public. Announcement regarding terms of the new issue will be made by the Treasury Tuesday.

Roosevelt Subtly Stresses Importance of Farm Control in Train Speeches.

By Franklyn Waltman

EN ROUTE With President Roosevelt, Sept. 4.—President Roosevelt's mastery of the political art, especially his superior ability to advance his political ideas without seeming to do so, subtly but surely, has never been better demonstrated than it has on his journey through the drought-stricken area.

WALTMAN.

Any one of the approximately score of talks and speeches which Mr. Roosevelt has delivered from the rear platform of his train, standing alone, only leaves the impression of a gracious and sincere Chief Executive indulging in pleasantries to a farm audience.

But taken in the aggregate, these informal talks contain a central thread—the promulgation of a single idea—and that is the necessity of Federal jurisdiction over the Nation's agriculture. In essence, it is a reply to the Supreme Court's contentions in the decisions invalidating the AAA; it is a reply to all those who assert the Federal Government should keep its hands off agriculture.

Not once has the President mentioned the Supreme Court. Only indirectly has he referred to those who criticize efforts toward a planned economy for agriculture. Yet wherever he has been he leaves the thought the agricultural problem—particularly the drought problem—is a national problem and one requiring the efforts of the Federal Government.

Even before he entered the national bread basket the President gave voice to his theme song. Speaking at Gary, Ind., on his trip westward, the President reminded steelworkers that their prosperity was inseparably linked with that of the farmer on the great plains—that one could not make economic progress without the other.

Reaching Bismarck, N. Dak., he told wheat farmers and cow men of that region that their prosperity depended on the welfare of the Southern cotton grower—that if the latter suffered reverses they would be unable to buy the bread and meat on which the prosperity of the Northwest depended.

As the President advanced down through the Dakotas and into Nebraska and Colorado and Wyoming, he hammered home the thought that no State in the Union, no section was sufficient unto itself, but had to depend on the country as a whole—and it all summed up into an argument for Federal jurisdiction in such matters.

Such was the theme of the Des Moines drought conference—the dependence of the States on the Federal Government in handling this emergency. Federal co-operation with the States, was the President's favorite terminology, but all familiar with such programs know that Federal co-operation always means Federal domination to a more or less extent.

Even Gov. Alf M. Landon was compelled to agree that the States standing alone were impotent to deal with the drought problem, either from an immediate or long-range viewpoint.

This brings up the question as to what extent Gov. Landon has been handicapped by the drought and the Des Moines conference in preaching his doctrine of State rights and pressing his opposition to Federal enroachments in matters formerly regarded as purely local.

There are some observers aboard this train who believe that President Roosevelt has effectively boxed Gov. Landon on this issue by drawing him into substantial agreement on the Federal program for handling the drought. They argue that the case for State rights and independence has been awakened by the first practical problem occurring during the campaign and that Gov. Landon had no recourse but to capitulate to the Roosevelt idea.

Such is their appraisal of the significance of the Des Moines meeting once the atmosphere of Damon and Pythias and the gracious felicitations are stripped away.

This line of argument, which undoubtedly will be employed during the remainder of the campaign, does not necessarily follow from the drought situation and the apparent harmony in dealing with that problem which exists between the President and his Republican opponent.

Gov. Landon has never argued that the Federal Government is without a responsiblity in dealing with any problem of national proportions, and a drought area stretching from the Canadian border approximately 1,000 miles southward to the Texas Panhandle must be regarded as a national problem.

But from the viewpoint of a logician it is difficult to distinguish between the social and economic dislocation coincident on such widespread crop failures as has occurred in this area and the maladjustment and disruption in the economic system which comes on the heels of overproduction in the same area.

If such a promise is granted then the argument naturally follows, as it is put by the New Dealers, that if it is justifiable for the Federal Government to take jurisdiction in one instance it is equally justifiable for it to do so in the other. This represents the horns of the dilemma on which it is contended Gov. Landon has been smilingly tossed by President Roosevelt.

The argument would be sound if politics were confined to logical action. It is not. Few beneficiaries of such action object to the Federal Government coming to the aid of distressed regions. As long as Federal activity is confined to signing the checks which pay the bills of such programs it will be welcome and cheered by those who benefit, even those who pay object.

But once the logic of the argument is stretched to the point where the Federal Government undertakes to impose restrictions which make impossible a recurrence of the conditions which it has been called on to relieve, even the beneficiaries raise their voice in opposition. This is clearly illustrated by the angry murmuring which followed suggestions that it would be wise to depopulate part of the drought regions—and President Roosevelt was quick to disavow such intentions.

Thus, as a matter of practical politics, Gov. Landon need not be bound by the logic of the stand which he has taken. Perhaps he would have been on firmer ground if he had taken the position that the Federal Government's activities should be confined to doing only that which individual States could not do for themselves. In that event, as an example, he would have contended that the duty of caring for Iowa farmers left destitute by the drought should be taken care of by the State, rather than the Federal Government, for Gov. Clyde L. Herring is authority for the statement that farm income in Iowa this year will be far in excess of last year, despite the drought.

The logic of that situation is that a number of Iowa farmers, unaffected by the drought and with acres yielding between 50 and 60 bushels of corn each, will benefit due to enhanced prices far beyond their just deserts, and the Eastern consumer will pay twice for the drought—first in the form of higher prices to these fortunate farmers, and, secondly, in the form of relief to the unfortunate Iowans.

But it is too much to expect that any candidate for office should have pressed such a viewpoint, irrespective of its logic. The fortunate Iowa farmer this year is not interested in such logic. Nor is the farmer who wants to raise all the wheat he can when the weather is propitious interested in the logic of the New Deal argument that he should be restrained for the general welfare of all. Nevertheless, for the campaign at hand, the President has driven home the point which he wishes to make.

deadline in the campaign. We will work with the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers in concentrating on the steel industry, and assist in other industries to a lesser degree."

U. M. W. Behind in Dues.

Lewis disclosed that the United Mine Workers are three months in arrears in their per capita dues to the American Federation of Labor—arrears amounting to $12,000.

"I think our timing was accurate," he smiled. "We though we would like to see whether we got any service from the American Federation of Labor."

The rival labor leader indicated the Committee for Industrial Organization will make no appearance at the American Federation of Labor convention which will pass finally on the executive council's action and decide whether the ten rebel unions are to be permanently expelled. But he said that is for the committee as a unit to decide.

"My own feeling is that it would be a waste of time and effort to go to the convention," Lewis said. "Obviously the suspension is being put into effect at this time so that the council will be in control of the convention."

Tenseness of the feeling between the two organizations was patent in several of Lewis' remarks.

"You all have heard the story of a snake theoretically biting itself," he said.

"I assume that Mr. Green and his associates have weighed the consequences of their actions."

Predicts Purge.

Asked what he thought the federation might do, he said:

"Cancellation and revocation of charters on a wholesale basis is the next logical step. Central and State federations probably will remain in the federation until 'purged.' But the logical assumption is that the federation will have to order them to 'purge' themselves of C. I. O. affiliates. And it is also a logical assumption that some of them will not do it."

He said, for example, that 70 per cent of the Pennsylvania State federation membership is associated with the C. I. O.

"The A. F. of L. will have to reorganize its membership, and if that isn't a giant's task, name one."

There appeared some difference of opinion over the hour which the formal suspension would take effect, but at federation headquarters it was said to be midnight tonight. Lewis apparently talked on the assumption that the order became effective last night.

"But Mr. Green can fix the hour," he said.

Member unions of the C. I. O. which will be subject to the suspension order are the Mine Workers, the Ladies' Garment Workers, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, the Oil Field and Refinery Workers, the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, the Flat Glass Workers, the United Automobile Workers, the United Rubber Workers and the United Textile Workers.

Officials of three other A. F. of L. unions not affected by the suspension order are associated with the C. I. O. In addition to a representative of the cap and millinery department of the United Hatters, Charles P. Howard, president of the International Typographical Union, and Heywood Broun, president of the American Newspaper Guild, are affiliated with the committee, but their organizations have not yet acted.

Lewis announced the mine workers now are organizing gas and by-product workers, under the temporary presidency of James Nelson, of Wakefield, Mass., and A. F. of L. organizer. He also introduced Phil Murray, of the iron, steel and tin group, who told of plans to seek higher wages and recognition of the steel industry.

Speculation turned last night on whether the A. F. of L. convention will follow its council's suspension order with formal expulsion, or concessions might be made to hold the huge C. I. O. membership within federation ranks. Lewis indicated the C. I. O. will make no overtures.

He charged the council suspension order was voted by council men representing only 882,800 workers, whereas suspended C. I. O. affiliates number more than 1,100,000.

Allen Keeps Silent On Play Site Row

George E. Allen, District Commissioner, yesterday permitted Miss Sibyl Baker, director of playgrounds, to have the last word in their row over the efficacy of the Works Progress Administration in relation to playgrounds.

He not only refused to make public the statement she had sent him after he agreed to complete the McMillan and New York avenue playgrounds, but he declined to have anything more to say about it.

"It's all over," he explained, "and I have nothing more to say. Miss Baker may have the last word if she wants it."

Mary Miles Minter Wins Brokerage Suit

Los Angeles, Sept. 4 (AP).—Judgment of $79,738.24 against Leslie B. Henry, convicted embezzler, was given in superior court today to Mary Miles Minter, star of the silent screen; her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, and Miss Minter's sister, Mrs. Margaret Shelby Fillmore.

The judgment was given in an accounting suit brought by the three women against Blyth & Co., brokerage firm, and Henry, its agent.

Blair & Co. settled its portion of the action by paying $125,000. Henry recently completed a term in San Quentin Prison after conviction on a charge that he misappropriated the women's money.

tion to support President Roosevelt for re-election.

"You can go into towns of 1,500 persons, out in the State," Murphy said, "and find as many as four tremendous signboards for the candidate opposing Couzens. That is being done in every area. It must cost at least $100,000 for just the billboard advertising."

Brucker Opposes Couzens.

Senator Couzens is opposed for re-nomination by former Gov. Wilber M. Brucker. Archie R. Fraser, his campaign manager, said today that an investigation would be welcomed, although he questioned the authority of the Senate to scrutinize expenditures in a State primary.

"We have had difficulty financing our campaign," Fraser said. "The whole thing probably arises from a statement in a labor paper recently, to the effect that the 'predatory interests' were 'pouring money into the Brucker campaign.'"

In Washington Chairman Lonergan said complaints had come to the committee from "citizens and attorneys" and included a charge that more than $500,000 now was available to one political party for expenditure in the Senatorial and gubernatorial races alone.

Committee officials said they were informed contributors to this fund were increasing daily and that "prominent individuals and corporations" had been named as donors of large sums. To what party the contributions were reported made was not disclosed.

"As far as I know," said James E. Davidson, Republican national committeeman, "we haven't had much of a fund yet. What money we have will not be spent until after the primary."

Edmund C. Shields, Democratic national committeeman, said:

"Chairman Lonergan can't mean the Democratic Party. We never saw that much money. I hope Mr. Glavis will call on me. If he will investigate me thoroughly he'll find out how little money you can get along on."

A local committee soliciting contributions to the Republican national campaign has announced Michigan's quota as $500,000, with one-third to be returned to Michigan for the campaign here.

Republican leaders have made no secret of their displeasure at Senator Couzens' announcement of support for President Roosevelt.

Murphy is opposed in the primary for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination by George W. Welsh, former Republican lieutenant governor. Both Murphy and Welsh have announced support for Roosevelt, and Murphy on several occasions has denied statements from both Democrats and Republicans that he entered the campaign solely because the National Administration asked him to.

Representative Prentiss M. Brown, of St. Ignace, a long-time friend of Senator Couzens, is one of four candidates for the Democratic senatorial nomination. The others are Ralph W. Liddy, of Detroit; Prof. John H. Myskens, of Ann Arbor, and Louis B. Ward, of Pontiac.

Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald (Republican) is seeking renomination, with Roscoe C. Fitch as his opponent. In addition, candidates are to be chosen for lieutenant governor and for Congressmen in 17 districts.

Welcomes Inquiry.

Indianapolis, Sept. 4 (AP).—Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald of Michigan tonight said he welcomed a "sincere" investigation by the United States Senate campaign expenditures committee in Michigan, but suggested the ordered inquiry may have been caused by Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley's "nervousness" over the primary election prospects.

Michigan's Republican Governor, here for a drought conference tomorrow with President Roosevelt and Governors and Senators from Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana, said "we are getting used to these political invasions from Washington."

"One more will do no harm," he said. "I hope this invasion is sincere, but one wonders if Mr. Farley isn't becoming nervous over the primary election prospects of his far East, hand-picked candidate (Frank Murphy) for Governor and is rushing these reinforcements into Michigan in an attempt to aid him.

"An investigation, if it is to be thorough, should cover not only private contributions. It most certainly should include the huge sums of taxpayers' money which are being spent without their consent in buying the favor and support of large number of voters."

Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Democrat), Michigan, joined Gov. Fitzgerald in welcoming a "decent and nonpartisan investigation."

Head of Smuggling Ring Kills Self on Steamer

New York, Sept. 4 (AP).—Naftale Loffelholz Brandstatter, said by Federal agents to have been the head of an international narcotics smuggling ring, committed suicide by hanging in the steamship Oriente today shortly before Government men boarded the ship to arrest him.

Customs inspectors boarded the ship in the harbor with a warrant for Brandstatter's arrest as a fugitive from Los Angeles.

The warrant was based on a Federal indictment returned against Brandstatter and Maria Wendt, 24-year-old Chinese woman, for allegedly smuggling $100,000 of heroin into the United States, and for conspiracy.

Lowell Flunks Test Given by Ex-Student

Hyannis, Mass., Sept. 4 (U.P.).—A. Lawrence Lowell, president emeritus of Harvard, took a test from one of his former students and flunked.

It was an examination given to all automobile drivers past 65. Lowell, 79, could not pass the test given by Inspector Louis Crocker, former special student at Harvard.

Lowell's license will not be renewed when it expires.

The Political Arena

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt traveled to Indianapolis to wind up drought talks with Governors before returning to Washington for tomorrow night's broadcast of the impressions he gained during his tour of affected States.

Gov. Alf M. Landon returned to Topeka after his conference with Mr. Roosevelt at Des Moines, Iowa, and after his tour of drought areas in Kansas. Associates of Herbert Hoover, in San Francisco, said Landon telephoned to the former President "regarding party affairs."

Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, told an audience in Maine Mr. Roosevelt "started out by being a good neighbor to the farmers by regimenting them."

Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic National Committee said he was "definitely convinced President Roosevelt and Gov. Lehman will receive a larger plurality in New York City than they had in 1932."

By the Associated Press.

Uvalde, Tex., Sept. 4.—A motherless bantam chick apparently interested Vice President John Garner today much more than a political speech he will make in New York September 16.

Garner evinced considerable concern over the care of the 3-day-old bantam.

"The hen was about to kill it so I am going to raise it myself and before long I will have a fine rooster," he explained, carefully adjusting the chick's basket so it could get proper sunlight.

The Vice President, nearing the end of a long, leisurely vacation at his Uvalde home, was noncommital about when he would leave for the East to take active part in the campaign.

Democratic Chairman James A. Farley announced yesterday Garner would speak September 16 at a dinner sponsored by a group of New York Democratic leaders and that party leaders expected the Vice President to make at least two radio speeches on behalf of himself and President Roosevelt.

Atchison, Kans., Sept. 4 (AP).—Ed Howe, famed "sage of Potato Hill," told Gov. Landon today the election campaign "is settled" in his favor and the Republican Presidential nominee, smiling, replied "that certainly is good news."

When the two were seated in his quiet, high-ceilinged living room, Howe said:

"My opinion is you've been overworked by advisers. You're doing fine the way it is.

"H. L. Mencken says Alf knows more than his advisers, and he's right. It's all settled."

Landon spent a half hour chatting with the 83-year-old writer and editor of the Atchison Globe.

In high spirits, Howe praised James A. Reed, former Missouri Senator, a Democrat, and Chester A. Curley, Miami attorney who, he told the Governor, was "an original Landon man."

Minneapolis Sept. 4 (AP).—Minnesota Republican leaders said today they had completed arrangements for Gov. Landon to speak in the Municipal Auditorium here the night of September 24.

Roy Dunn, Republican National Committeeman for Minnesota, and T. M. McCabe, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, said Landon also will make several impromptu talks at other Minnesota points from the rear platform of his train en route to Minneapolis.

A charge that the Democratic National Committee is spreading propaganda in CCC camps in an effort to convince the men there that Gov. Landon would abolish their jobs was made tonight by William Hard, Republican commentator.

"This propaganda is conducted through a periodical called 'Happy Days,'" said Hard in a broadcast for the Republican National Committee.

"This periodical is bought in bulk by CCC camps for distribution in the mess halls. It is published and edited by Mr. Melvin Ryder. Mr. Ryder—according to the Washington office of the Democratic National Committee—is employed by the committee."

Hard added, "it is well known that the CCC camps, in and of themselves, have the overwhelming support of the members and leaders of both great political parties."

"It is well known that the management of the camps by the Army has kept them at a level of efficiency of which the whole American people are proud," he said. "It is all the more astonishing, therefore, that the Democratic National Committee is permitted to drag this great nonpartisan American institution into its electioneering propagandist web."

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 4 (AP).—George M. Neffner, of the Secretary of State's office, announced late today he had received notice from the Socialist Party it would not file nominating petitions for candidates for President and State offices.

Neffner said he was informed the party had only 15,000 signatures on nominating petitions. About 22,000 are required for candidates to gain a place on the Ohio ballot as independents.

Landon Tours Drought Zone Of Own State

the superintendent, he visited various buildings.

Landon went straight to the executive mansion upon his arrival in Topeka. His next scheduled visit is to Wichita Monday to attend the State American Legion convention. The Governor said he would make "a few remarks" probably about 11:30 a. m. (12:30 p. m., Eastern standard time).

Over dusty dirt roads, so narrow that apple laden branches scraped his automobile, the Republican nominee motored up and down hills through orchards and vineyards, munched apples plucked off the tree and ate grapes he picked from the vine.

He talked with farmers, asked about drought damage and read musty newspaper files in Troy, Kans.

Throughout the trip, the nominee was trailed by seven automobiles of aids, advisers, newsmen and photographers. He wore the grey suit in which he dined last night on President Rosevelt's special train.

Landon did not leave St. Joseph, Mo., where he spent the night with William M. Clark, friend and Republican leader, until after 10 o'clock. He breakfasted with Clark, Robert G. Clayton and H. A. Sprague, publisher of the St. Joseph News Press.

Before leaving, he bought some antiques for Mrs. Landon, who collects early American glass, and called on Mrs. Charles H. Jackson, who aids said nursed the Governor as a baby in Pennsylvania.

H. J. Hagan, publisher of the Wathena, Kans., Times, joined the Landon group at Wathena, leading the way in his automobile to the 500-acre farm of B. F. and V. M. Duback, brothers.

The caravan stopped in the heart of an apple orchard. Landon picked a few, tossed them to members of the party and took a good bite himself even though the apples were green. Aids said the Jonathan apples, of Doniphan County, are favorites with the Governor.

"This is about the best crop of apples we have seen on the road yet," Landon remarked to P. F. Duback.

"But its not good enough," Duback said, adding to newsmen that the drought had not been as severe in his section as in 1934.

During part of his orchard visit, Landon was accompanied by a group of Doniphan County farmers on an inspection tour of their own.

The Governor's party halted in Troy to visit the office of the Kansas Chief, a weekly newspaper, founded by Charles Miller, 79 years ago.

Quoddy Shifted To Youth Unit For Huge Camp

Action of President Hints Year's Delay in His Power Project.

By the Associated Press.

Deferring until next year, at least, the resumption of work on Maine's $30,000,000 tidal power project, President Roosevelt yesterday authorized the National Youth Administration to use Passamaquoddy village as a huge work camp.

A group of Youth Administration officials, who direct expenditure of work relief funds to provide part time jobs for 565,000 young people, immediately left for Maine to work out tentative plans to utilize the village's carpenter and machine shops in the manufacture of furniture and other supplies for youth centers.

The Army built snug houses and barracks for 3,000 persons, but officials said they doubted whether all the space available would be utilized at first.

"Our tentative plans," said Richard R. Brown, deputy executive director of NYA, "are to carry on an NYA work project including prefabrication of materials to be used by youth programs throughout the country. Emphasis will be placed on vocational training through the use of shop and other facilities available."

Assignment of Quoddy Village to the Youth Administration, a branch of WPA, ended months of speculation centering on earlier proposals to convert the village into a Resettlement Administration community or a veterans' hospital, starting when Congress failed to provide funds to carry on the power project.

The project was started with a $7,000,000 work relief allotment. On his recent cruise to Maine, the President told the people of Eastport that "Quoddy will be completed."

Capital Woman Named Winner Of Bendix Race

Mrs. Louise Thaden Beats Foremost Fliers; Two Hurt, One Killed.

the Bendix race, Laura Ingalls finished second.

William Gulick, of New York, was third.

George Pomeroy, of this city, was fourth. He flew a transport, the private plane of Henry Doherty, oil magnate.

Amelia Earhart Putnam, famed transatlantic flier, finished fifth and last in her "laboratory" plane.

Surprised at Winning.

All contestants in the race, with the exception of Miss Ingalls, were accompanied by others. Mrs. Thaden's companion was Miss Blanche Noyes, of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Thaden, who is an airport checker for the Department of Commerce, had not idea she had won the race when she landed at Los Angeles. Taken before a microphone, according to the Associated Press, she said:

"If we actually have won the Bendix race, we will be more surprised than anybody. We thought we were making rotten time, but that we would come on in anyway, even at the tail-end of the race."

Her flying time—14 hours and 54 minutes—was 3 hours and 24 minutes more than the east-west record Col. Roscoe Turner set in 1933. Turner cracked up this year while flying to New York to start in the race.

Plane Maker's Wife.

Mrs. Thaden is the wife of Maj. Herbert V. Thaden, airplane manufacturer. She has two children, who are in Bentonville, Ark.

She first attracted the attention of the aviation world in 1929, when she attained a woman's altitude record of 20,270 feet at Oakland, Calif.

Her job for the Bureau of Air Navigation of the Department of Commerce is to fly about the country and check markers for airports.

In capturing the Bendix Air Derby, she won $4,500 of the $15,000 prize money. She won another $2,500 offered for the woman who made the best time without the aid of a male pilot or mechanic.

Lives at Tourist Home.

In Washington Mrs. Thaden lives at a tourist home at 2024 F street northwest conducted by Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Willard.

"We did not know for a long time that she was a flier" Willard said last night. "She is very quiet and you would never think she was the type of girl who does daring things."

Not Expected to Live.

Howard and his wife crashed near the Tanner Indian post. Indian sheep herders saw their ship plunge to the ground, but superstition kept them away. A school teacher was the first to summon aid, buit it required three hours for her to do it.

Dr. Fred oe, of Crown Point, told the United Press last night he did not expect either Howard or Mrs. Howard to live until morning. He asserted the length of time that had elapsed between the crash and treatment was so great that their condition was "nearly hopeless."

At first it was reported the two might recover, although it seemed almost certain that their broken legs would have to be amputated.

Howard was pinned beneath the motor, and rescuers had to use saws to clear the wreckage and reach him. He was conscious when taken out and said the crash was caused by a break in his gas line. Mrs. Howard was extricated without difficulty.

'Chute Saves His Life.

Jacobson started to leave New York without a parachute. A mechanic forced one on him, thereby saving his life, as it turned out.

Jacobson boarded a passenger plane at Wichita, Kans., and continued to the air meet at Los Angeles.

William Gulick, husky New York flier, was the first of the Bendix racers to land at Los Angeles. At first it was thought he had won. Then it was discovered that his elapsed time was greater than that of Mrs. Thaden and Miss Ingalls. He won $1,500 in prize money.

Miss Ingalls got $2,500, Pomeroy collected $1,000.

Miss Earhart, the only other entrant to finish in the race, received $500 in prize money.

Lloyd George Visits Hitler in Mountains

Berchtesgaden, Bavaria, Germany, Sept. 4 (AP).—David Lloyd George, Great Britain's premier during the World War and one of the authors of the Treaty of Versailles, tonight clasped hands with German Chancellor Adolf Hitler, who as a soldier in the war fought the British and as a statesman denounced the treaty.

Lloyd George, on a study tour, was accompanied by his son and Joachim von Ribbentrop, Reich ambassador-designate to the Court of St. James.

Hitler and Lloyd George chatted animatedly about three hours.

Besides a discussion of general European politics, a reliable authority said, Hitler and Lloyd George touched on a possible new Locarno agreement. Details, however, were not disclosed.

School Books Brought By Beer Tax Opposed

Greensboro, Ga., Sept. 4 (AP).—The Greensboro ministers' conference today expressed opposition to use of free school books in this section on the grounds that users of the books, obtained through a tax on beer, would thus indorse alcoholic drinks.

Approximately 700 books have been ordered by the State department of education in Atlanta for free distribution to pupils in the first six grades of the Greensboro schools.

Probably having some effect on the otherwise general shortage of earnings under dividends was a slight climb in current expenses of the 12 banks for the six-month period to a total of $15,851,658.

"Growth in member bank holdings of direct obligations of the United States Government was exceptionally large in the first half of this year, reflecting the substantial volume of new issues sold by the Treasury in March and June," the bulletin reported.

Debt Up 2½ Billion.

"The total interest-bearing debt of the United States Government, excluding adjusted service bonds and other issues not offered for public sale, increased by about $2,500,000,000 between December 31, 1935, and June 30, 1936. Member banks increased their holdings by nearly half of this amount."

In the bulletin's financial review of the month, the Federal Reserve Board disclosed that the amount of money in circulation during the last three weeks of June, when the bulk of bonus payments were being made, increased by $310,000,000. There has been only a moderate decline since.

The board estimated that approximately one-half of the $1,212,000,000 paid out for the bonus has not yet returned to the banks. The board's figures indicated some of the bonus money is coming back into the banks, however. From July 1 to 29, the return flow was estimated at $130,000,000, against a normal return flow of about $80,000,000 in such a period.

Excess Reserves Cut.

The board reported that excess reserves of member banks were cut from $2,920,000,000 on July 15, to $1,810,000,000 on August 19, due substantially to the 50 per cent increase in reserve requirements on August 15. The board said about $1,470,000,000 of excess reserves was absorbed by the increase in reserve requirements.

"Excess reserves were so widely distributed among the member banks that few banks had an insufficient amount to meet the increase in requirements," the board reported. "In the week including the increase, a few scattered banks borrowed at the reserve banks, but the total amount borrowed was negligible."

Since June 30, while reserves of member banks have increased substantially, deposits have shown little change, and at weekly reporting member banks in leading cities total loans and investments were $360,000,000 smaller on August 19 than on July 1.

Woman Swims Mile In Sea to Save Two

Quincy, Mass., Sept. 4 (AP).—A quincy mother swam nearly a mile fully clothed in uincy Bay today to rescue her 5-year-old son, drifting to sea with an 8-year-old companion, in an oarless rowboat.

Mrs. Chester V. Anderson, 24, turned the boat around and pushed it to shore. Aboard were Chester, jr., and Giard Reed. The boys, playing in the craft, let it drift from the wharf where it had been moored.

The youngsters, she said later, lifted the anchor and a strong ebb tide carried the craft toward the open sea.

Insomniac Finally Sleeps.

Leeds, Ala., Sept. 4 (U.P.).—John Adams tonight hoped his latest sleepless marathon was ended after a 14-hour slumber, induced by triple sedatives, broke a ten-day period of insomnia. A 49-year-old war veteran, Adams blames his condition on 13 months in the trenches, and spent his latest ten sleepless nights pacing the floor, talking to policemen on night beats.

Two Communists in New Cabinet Formed by Caballero at Madrid

it was reported reliably, they are pledged to support it.

[The United Press reported the new cabinet held its first meeting—in secret—last night. Afterward an official statement outlining the government's purpose to solidify the nation and suppress the rebels was given out.—Editor's Note.]

Admits Estremadura Peril.

Before the new cabinet was announced to gain "maximum weight with the working classes," Indalecio Prieto, Socialist leader, said:

"Truth does not allow us to hide the fact there lies serious danger in Estremadura because rebels have concentrated their best troops there with their best generals.

"The rebels have gathered there all the war materials which some nations unscrupulously sent them."

Giral Pereira also cited the perilous plight of the Spanish republic. Announcing President Manuel Azana had accepted his resignation, he said:

"The grave situation precipitated by duration of the civil war now raging in Spain induced the government to resign in favor of a regime which should embrace all popular front parties and which should have the maximum weight with working classes throughout Spain."

The Communist members were Jesus Hernandez, a newspaperman, appointed minister of education, and the noted propagandist, Vicente Uribe, leader of the Communist minority in the Cortes, who became secretary of agriculture.

Prieto, Socialist "strong man," was named minister of air and navy. Other posts went to two Left-wing Republicans, one Republican Unionist, and one Ezquerra (a political faction in the Valencia and Catalan regions). One vacancy, still to be filled, probably will go to a Basque Nationalist.

The cabinet members are:

Premier—Francisco Largo Caballero, Extreme Socialist.

Treasury—Juan Negrin, Socialist.

State—Julio Alvarez del Vayo, Socialist.

War—Francisco Largo Caballero.

Labor—Jose Tomas Piera, Ezquerra.

Education—Jesus Hernandez, Communist.

Agriculture—Vicente Uribe, Communist.

Communications—Bernardo Giner de los Rios, Republican-Unionist.

Industry and commerec—Anastasio de Graciz, Socialist.

Interior—Angel Galarza, Socialist.

Justice—Mariano Ruiz Funes, Socialist.

Air and Navy—Indalecio Prieto, Socialist.

Giral Pereira was named minister without portfolio.

Largo Caballero had been active, as president of the General Workers Union, in combating Spanish Fascism.

After the outbreak of the revolt he went to the Guadarrama front and his knowledge of fighting conditions and acquaintance with the commanders of government troops on all fronts was expected to be seen in revitalized efforts to crush the uprising.

Differs With Caballero.

Prieto, as head of the Moderate Socialists, does not see eye to eye with Cabalerro within the party, but his shrewdness and political sagacity, observers believed, would benefit the new regime. He was frequently called "the power behind the throne" of the Giral government.

The cabinet change came after a meeting with President Azana at which foreign complications arising from the civil war were discussed. Government officials predicted "sensational revelations" shortly concerning foreign aid to the rebels.

In an official communique, the ministry of war reported government victories in the Estremadura region of Badajoz and Cacares provinces.

Government leaders predicted the surrender of Huesca by rebels and said recapture of the city by loyalist forces would "enable us to concentrate all our northern forces," thus clearing the way to Zaragoza.

They said a strong rebel column deserted the insurgents and joined government ranks at Luarxa, near Oviedo on the northern coast.

Government sources predicted quick victories against the rebels in the Guadarrama Mountains north of Madrid and at Toledo, south of the capital.

Rome, Sept. 4 (AP).—Reliable sources said tonight three 6,000-ton cruisers had sailed for Spain today in the wake of the 10,000-ton cruiser Pola heading for Barcelona.

These sources said the war vessels sailed with all possible secrecy and therefore it was assumed no official announcement would be forthcoming.

It was estimated Italy now has 29 naval units in or near Spanish waters, the majority of which are auxiliary craft hovering within fast cruising radius of bigger ships already stationed at Spanish ports.

With the cruiser nearing Barcelona, an Italian press ministry spokesman said tonight the government "hopes there will be no need to intervene in Spain."

Italy, he said, may have to take active steps to protect her nationals if the Spanish authorities are unable to do so and another Italian death results from the Spanish civil war.

The Pola was sent under forced draft to join another Italian warship already at Barcelona after the killing of an Italian worker by Spanish government forces was reported Thursday.

Britain Reassures Nazis.

London, Sept. 4 (AP).—Great Britain tonight assured Nazi Germany the proposed neutrality conference on the Spanish civil war would be formed strictly along nonintervention lines, and political intrusions would not be permitted.

By this assurance, England hoped to bring Germany officially into the Spanish neutrality fold and hold the first meeting of an international committee in London next week.

The move followed up the belief of informed sources that refusals of Germany and Portugal to sit on the neutrality committee before its aims and scope were outlined to them sistance. Not all of them fled, however, and one little machine gun nest held up the Moors' advance with some stubborn fighting.

The strange thing was that there wasn't a single Spaniard in that machine gun nest. They were foreign volunteers—ten Frenchmen, one Belgian and one German.

The French gave the Moors as good as they received today and 20 volunteers from across the border lay dead when quiet came.

Charge Irresistible.

Wherever the Moors found the enemy out in the open, their charge was irresistible. This is the way they fought:

They would reach into sacks and get hand grenades which they would hurl toward the enemy, making their own barrage. Then, waving their rifles and knives, they charged.

The great moment came at last for the rebels in the square fronting the town hall. There was a shout from near where a furniture factory had caught fire. I turned and saw 150 rebels—they were Carlists—come charging into the square. Loyalist snipers fired and then fled. The Carlists cheered as they entered the town hall and hoisted the red and gold flag of the monarchy.

Irun officially had been captured.

the other side." The same reason—sympathy with the rebel cause—was believed to have actuated the others, but none could be reached for comment. Besides Olivares, those who have left are:

Don Luis M. de Yrujo, counselor of embassy, who resigned while on leave in Madrid; Don Jose G. de Gregorio, second secretary; Don Ramon Padilla y de Satrustegui, second secretary, and Don Miguel Echegaray y Romea, agricultural attache. The latter was on leave when the revolution broke out and has not been heard from since.

Press dispatches reporting the Madrid government had ordered the dismissal of Maj. Ramon Franco, air attache and brother of Rebel Generalissimo Franco, threw considerable doubt in diplomatic circles on his present status. But the embassy said he still is counted as a member of the staff, because no instructions concerning him have been received.

Maj. Franco is known as the Spanish "Lindbergh," because of a flight from Spain to South America.

Franco Still Here.

The embassy said Maj. Franco was "not in" at the moment, but that he was believed to be still in Washington.

Asked if he intended to return to Spain, Olivares said he had not yet completed his plans. He refused to discuss the present whereabouts and intentions of his resigned colleagues in this respect.

Meanwhile, Ambassador Calderon continues to transact routine business, but has secluded himself from all but official and intimate personal acquaintances. His palatial embassy on upper Sixteenth street is closed to casual callers and the veteran career diplomat denies himself to interviewers.

His last public statement was issued several weeks ago, when he denied formally that the present Spanish government is "red or communistic."

prevented creation of a satisfactory body.

Portugal already had agreed to be a member, but she raised the same questions contained in Germany's conditional acceptance.

The British government, meanwhile, instructed its Barcelona consul general to protest against reported seizure by a Catalonian workers' committee of the Traction, Light & Power Co., registered in Canada.

Irun in Flames After Capture By Insurgents

Rebels Take City, Press Toward San Sebastian; Bishop Is Slain.

basian, there to be executed piecemeal as the rebels advanced.

Among the hostages refugees said had been killed by government retreating forces were the Bishop of Valladolid, Victor Parada, leader of the Spanish Traditionalist Party, and Honorio Maura, monarchist deputy.

Thus, at bayonet point amidst a deadly shower of hand grenades, did the rebels conquer at Irun—the city they paid so dearly to capture, believing its possesion would give them a strong focal position for the rear guards of the armies set to march on Madrid to the south.

Moors and Sapnish foreign legionnaires tonight were running through four-fifths of the Spanish northern coast frontier.

Face Certan Death.

Throughout the earlier part of the day groups of government fighting men faced certain death rather than surrender.

Repeatedly little groups of 20 or 30 men fought through to the approaches to the two international bridges and held them with their backs to France until they were riddled to a man by the rebel volleys.

First one side held the bridgeheads then the other—but always bullets whined across the 100-foot wide Bidassoa River into France.

Some weeping, some laughing hysterically, exhausted government militiamen braved a screen of bullets to cross over into France and search for their women and children.

They were disarmed by French border patrols and interned, although it was said that those who so desired might be shipped to Barcelona to rejoin their comrades on another front.

Bodies at Monastery.

From rooftops on the French side of the border could be seen a number of white-robed bodies strewn on the roof of the Fuenter-Rabia Monastery. Observers thought the bodies were those of monks shot by the fleeing government forces.

Looking out to sea, observers could make out government gunboat No. 3 aground on a sand bank, which it had struck during a bombardment of rebel shore positions. The crew had deserted the vessel.

In crumbling Fort Guadalupe, one of Irun's defenses, a handful of government fighting men set their faces and guns against the rebel advancers, ready to die by their guns.

Automobiles along the line of the government retreat were drenched with gasoline and fired, making separate smoke screens to cover the flight.

Across the river 150 French soldiers were brought up by bus to reinforce the border gendarme patrol.

Rebel Dissension Reported.

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 4 (AP).—Government besiegers of the famous old Alcazar Military School here reported tonight they heard evidence that a bitter struggle was going on among the Fascist rebels who have been holding out in the fortress for weeks.

They said rebellious civil guards and private soldiers, fearing for the safety of their wives and families, were kept from surrendering only by the fact their officers held machine guns trained on them and taunted them bitterly for their "cowardice."

The mayor of Toledo said a battle had been raging on the Talavera front, west of Toledo, for more than 36 hours. The insurgents, after vanquishing the panic-stricken government soldiers at Oropesa, were brought to a sudden halt when 4,000 well-equipped reinforcements arrived, the mayor declared.

Powell, Joan Blondell Linked in Bridal Rumor

Hollywood, Sept. 4 (AP).—Odds were heavy in gossip circles here today that Joan Blondell and Dick Powell, both planning vacation trips to New York, will return as Mr. and Mrs. Dick Powell.

As soon as the blond film actress is able to file for her final divorce decree—Tuesday—from Camerman George Barnes, she is leaving for New York and her wardrobe, say fashion designers, contains a creation suitable either for a bride or hostess. Powell also will leave for the East soon.

Russians Warn Japan to Halt Frontier Raids

File Protest After Report of Five New Incidents; Tokyo Dubious.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Sept. 4.—Amidst suddenly increased tension over the Far Eastern situation, Russia tonight warned Japan that border incidents were endangering the cause of peace.

The Russian government also instructed its Tokyo Embassy to protest immediately new alleged violations of the Soviet frontier by Japanese-Manchurians.

The situation on the frontier, Russia warned, was becoming "intolerable."

The reasons for the sudden outcropping of the new border "incidents" remained unexplained in Moscow. Since April the border tension had been more or less eased.

Hope for Agreement.

It had been hoped, official quarters in Moscow said, that the Mongolian-Manchurian agreement to reopen border dispute negotiations on September 25 might be followed by a similar agreement between the Soviets and Japanese-Manchurians.

The Japanese, however, were said to be holding off because of their professed doubts of Soviet sincerity.

B. I. Kozloffsky, head of the second eastern department of the Soviet foreign office, delivered his government's warning to Shichi Sakoh, Japanese Charge d'Affaires.

Five New Incidents.

While protests, counter-protests and new protests were flying back and forth between Moscow and Tokyo, five more incidents, all of which might be serious, were reported from Khabarovsk, bringing to more than a dozen the number reported in the week.

Two separte boatloads of Russians were said to have been fired upon; Manchurian soldiers were alleged to have fired on the village of Tulovchikha while scouting Japanese airplanes crossed the frontier for a distance of 15 miles near Pavlovo-Fedorovka; another Japanese plane was reported to have flown over Blagoveshshensk September 1.

Protests to China.

Tokyo, Sept. 4 (AP).—Japan tonight made and received protests over incidents reported on its borders.

It drafted an eight-point demand to the Chinese government for settlement of the Chengtu incident and for control of anti-Japanese acts in China.

Its charge d'affaires at Moscow received a stern warning from the Soviet that Japanese-Manchurian soldiers were endangering peace by alleged border violations.

The Chengtu incident involved the reported killings of two Japanese August 24 by a Chinese mob protesting reopening of a Japanese consulate, Chengtu, in Szechuan Province.

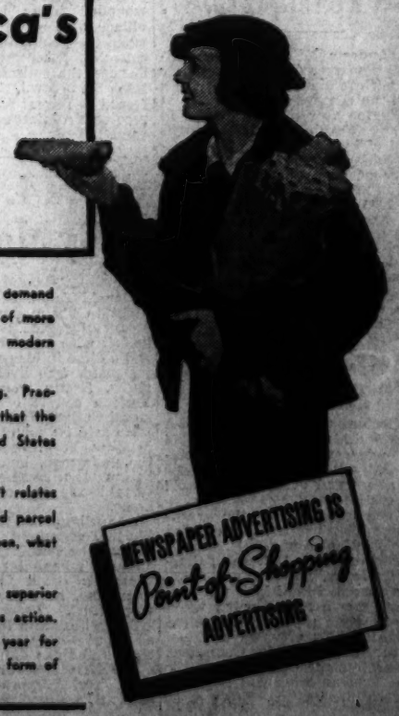
Making America's Millions Buy



Production is useless unless the retailer transforms demand into positive buying action. Last year's retail sales of more than $32,600,000,000.00 are ample evidence of the modern retailer's economic service.
Mainspring of retail sales is newspaper advertising. Practically everybody reads newspapers. Figures show that the average family buys more than 8 copies of United States newspapers every week.
Newspaper advertising is read eagerly because it relates the store to its locality. This advertising is part and parcel of the news consumers want—it tells them where, when, what and how to buy.
Retail experience demonstrates that newspapers are superior to all other media as the prime movers behind sales action. And this is why retailers spend $382,000,000.00 a year for newspaper advertising—far more than for any other form of sales promotion.

Japanese Aids Reject Appeal By Farnsworth

Embassy Officials Refuse Affidavit Asked by Espionage Suspect.

Efforts of John Farnsworth, former United States naval officer, to clear himself of espionage charges through aid of Japanese naval attaches in Washington, were blocked yesterday almost as soon as they were made, The Post learned.

Farnsworth yesterday had written the Japanese Ambassador requesting affidavits from five Japanese naval officers in an attempt to seek exoneration of charges of selling Navy information to the Japanese government.

The former naval officer in his letter demanded a statement from Capt. Tamon Yamaguchi, Japanese naval attache, and his two assistant, Commanders B. Yamaguchi and E. Jo.

Capt. Yamaguchi told The Post last night he had read Farnsworth's letter, and commented:

"Even if he asked me personally, I could not grant an affidavit.

"In the first place, I don't even know the man, and I certainly wouldn't do something for somebody I didn't even know."

In his letter, Farnsworth, now in the District jail facing court-martial, said he noted a change in the personnel of the Naval office here is imminent. He said he wanted a statement from the three officers before the change took place.

This assumption, Capt. Yamaguchi confirmed.

"Yes," he said, "I probably will leave for Japan within a month."

Farnsworth also requested the Ambassador to communicate with two men in Tokyo, who formerly were connected with the embassy here.

The two officers were Commander Yosiyuki Itimiya and Commander Jo, mentioned in the second indictment returned against Farnsworth by a grand jury which charged him with conspiracy to sell secret information concerning the National Defense of the United States to the Japanese government.

The affidavits asked by Farnsworth were to the effect that his connection with the Japanese Navy was in the capacity of "adviser" and of a "perfectly legitimate nature," according to the letter which was dated August 21.

Farnsworth is being held in default of $1,000 bond after he pleaded not guilty to the first indictment. He was scheduled to enter a plea on the second hearing recently, but the hearing was postponed because Japanese naval officers and sailors were here on a visit.

Farnsworth yesterday declined to make any comment on the letter. He said he had not received an answer either from the State Department or the Japanese Embassy.

The Japanese ambassador now is at his summer home in Virginia and could not be reached yesterday.

'Fighting Third' To See Review At Fort Today

The veterans of "the Fighting Third," crack United States Cavalry regiment, will be buests at Fort Myer today in the first feature of their three-day convention program here.

Included among the veterans will be men who have responded to "Boots and Saddles" in Cuba, France and the far-off Philippines during the turbulent days there early in the century. Oldest of them is Reuben Wright, 93, who rode with the regiment during the Civil War.

The program at Fort Myer will give the men who stormed San Juan Hill and fought the Moros and Tegalos a chance to compete methods in use today with those in vogue when they were "hard-riding hombres."

At 10 a. m., the veterans will witness a review of the regiment, arranged by Col. J. M. Wainwright, commandant of Fort Myer. After that Troop E will put on its "musical ride" and Troop F, the "rodeo rider," will give an exhibition of trick and fancy riding, concluding with the spectacular fire jump.

At noon, the old cavalrymen will be given a luncheon at Troop F barracks and will have a chance to impress the present-day rookies with tales of prowess in bygone wars. A visit to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier will follow.

After a business session tonight, tomorrow will be given over to sightseeing. The annual dinner will take place at the Powhatan Hotel at 6 p. m., with Col. Alfred Ballin, president of the association, wielding the gavel. The convention will conclude Monday with a farewell breakfast at the hotel.

Coast Professor To Teach at G. W.

Dr. Andrew Bailey, Stanford University professor and noted authority on American diplomatic history, will spend the coming academic year in Washington as visiting professor in George Washington University's school of history.

Dr. Bailey will teach courses in the history of foreign relations of the United States, the United States from 1865 to 1898, the United States since the Spanish-American War, and a proseminar in the diplomatic history of the United States.

Author of "Theodore Roosevelt and the Japanese-American Crisis," published in 1934, Dr. Bailey holds degrees of A. B., A. M., and Ph. D. from Stanford.

Farmer, 4 Sons Killed When Train Hits Auto

Coshocton, Ohio, Sept. 4 (AP).—A farmer and his four sons were killed today when their automobile collided with a Pennsylvania passenger train at a rural grade crossing 2½ miles east of here.

The bodies pulled from the wreckage were identified as those of John W. Fields, 45, of Adamsville, and his sons, Raymond, 18; Cletus, 13; Clarence, 11; Russell, 5.

Witnesses said the Fields were returning from a melon patch when their old sedan skidded and stalled atop the slightly elevated crossing. The train, westbound for Columbus, ploughed into the car.

More than an hour was required to identify the victims.

Hoover to Take Stump in Behalf Of Gov. Landon

New York, Denver Talks This Month to Open Part in Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Sept. 4.—Former President Herbert Hoover, leaving on an Eastern trip, tonight said he would make some campaign speeches in behalf of Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, the Republican Presidential nominee.

Hoover, jovially greeting newspapermen at the Ferry building, said he had talked yesterday with Gov. Landon over the telephone from his Palo Alto home.

The former Chief Executive would not discuss details of the conversation other than to say: "Gov. Landon is mobilizing his forces."

As to his own part in the Republican campaign, Hoover said he had accepted engagements for two addresses this month in behalf of the Kansas Governor, one in New York and one in Denver.

He said the Denver address was tentatively set for September 28 at a mining conference there, but he was not certain of the New York date.

Hoover said he also would make "other talks," but that locations and dates were unsettled.

"I entered the fight a month ago," he said, "and I am going to be in it until the end."

The former Republican President appeared in excellent health and spirits as he talked with newspapermen prior to boarding a ferry for the trip to Oakland, where he had train reservations for New York to attend several directors' meetings September 9. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hoover.

Tax Collector Kills 3.

Belgrade, Sept. 4 (U.P.).—Three peasants were killed and many wounded today in the Croatian village of Tugovec, near Byelovar, when the population attacked a tax collector. Accompanied by gendarmes, the collector fired a volley into the crowd, but finally was forced to retreat when the villagers received reinforcements from surrounding towns.

Dewey Sees Fascism, Violence Unless Intelligence Rules U. S.

Philosopher Urges End to 'Socially Unscientific' Trend in Harvard Talk; Eddington Refutes Theory Explosion Was Origin of Universe.

By the United Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 4.—Dr. John Dewey, gray-haired Columbia University professor and eminent philosopher, tonight predicted "some kind of violence" if America persisted in its present "socially unscientific" trend.

"I think there will be a swaying back and forth," he told newsmen prior to reading his paper on "authority and resistance to social change," at Harvard's tercentenary conference of arts and sciences.

First, he said, there would be a swing to "something like" fascism.

"There will be a tightening up," he said, "then a swing back. We'll be in a bad way, with some kind of violence in time. I think Democratic institutions give the best chance, but they don't go far enough."

Some ideas of the Roosevelt Administration Dewey said were good, but "they are carried out by old-fashioned means."

He believed the Administartion in "some ways has gone ahead, and in some, not." He favored a third major political party.

Dewey was apologetically disposed toward the dictatorship of Soviet Russia.

"As far as I know," he said, "Soviet Russia has increased freedom. They are suppressing some kinds of freedom, but not science. It was a very backward country and progress has been difficult."

The philosopher stressed the need of a scientific approach by co-operative intelligence to all questions affecting the State and the people.

"Ditcatorships today," he said, "are running on a scientific application of unscientific ideas."

Films of Sun Shown.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 4 (AP).—Thunderstorms of fire on the sun and "Roman candle" discharges of fiery balls the size of the earth shot to heights of 100,000 miles, discovered in the last few weeks by motion pictures, were shown at the Harvard tercentenary today.

Sir Arthur Stanley Eddington, one of the foremost English astronomers, united Einstein's relativity and quantum mechanics to show that the universe did not originate in the sort of primeval explosion which has been assumed since great telescopes discovered that it appeared to be expanding like a bubble.

Astronomy Session Today.

The tercentenary will hold a brief astronomical session tomorrow and then recess to resume Monday with a symposium on "factors determining human behavior."

The sun's thunderstorms were discovered only two weeks ago. They were shown by Dr. Heber D. Curtis, of the University of Michigan. The pictures were taken at the McMath Observatory, direct photographs of the sun made by screening out all rays except those from incandescent gases of calcium, hydrogen or helium.

The storms were seen above the edge of the sun. In clear atmosphere there, clouds of calcium gas formed 100,000 miles above the solar surface. The clouds descended in streamers like fogs of fire to the surface. Afterward huge jets of flame and projectiles of gas shot outward and upward from the sun's surface.

"We see," said Dr. Curtis, describing other explosions, "great fiery jets of matter shooting out from sun spot or other disturbed areas at speeds reaching 100 miles or more per second. They come one after another like the successive discharges of a roman candle.

"We see great areas of lower-lying prominences (flames) perhaps 5,000 miles high, where they are blown sidewise by some gust or attraction like a fire in a field of wheat."

The hot breath that blows these tops, Dr. Curtis said, may have a velocity of 50 miles a second.

The "roman candle" balls are glowing gas; usually oval. Many are 1,000 miles long and 200 to 300 miles thick. A few are the earth's size. They are about as dense as the gas inside an electric light bulb. Dr. Curtis said there was no possibility that they were new "earths" trying to escape from the sun.

Missing Nurses' Abduction Laid To Two in N. Y.

Montpelier Police Receive Mysterious Telegram; Foul Play Feared.

By the Associated Press.

Montpelier, Vt., Sept. 4.—A warrant was issued tonight for two men, charging them with abduction of two Vermont nurses, at the same time that police received a mysterious telegram claiming they were honeymooning in Canada.

The warrant, issued by State's Attorney Webster E. Miller, charged Dale Ainsworth, 22, of Herkimer, N. Y., and Fred Otto, 24, of Buffalo, N. Y., with abduction.

Acting Police Chief George Connor said that coincidentally police had received a telegram reading:

"Honeymooning at Ontario Inn, Hamlin.—Leita Ott."

(Signed) Leita Ott."

Connor said police were puzzled by the telegram. The signature "Leita Ott," he said, should properly have been Leila Otto if, as the telegram seemed to indicate, Miss Leila Ginette, of St. Albans, had married Otto, one of the men named in the warrant.

In addition, Connor said, the telegram was addressed to C. H. Ginett, St. Albans.

C. H. Ginett, Connor explained, was the name of Leila's father, who died several years ago.

Miss Ginette's missing companion is Loreha Hills, of Williamstown Vt. Both girls are 21 and have been missing since Wednesday from the Heaton Hospital here.

That night they rode away, Connor said, in a 1936 coupe with New York registration plates.

If the nurses are not found before tomorrow morning, he said, police will search surrounding wooded sections on the theory the two girls had met with foul play.

Utility Workers Cut Off Power To Aid Protest

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, Mo., Sept. 4.—Thirteen union employes of the Missouri Public Service Co. barricaded themselves in the plant here today and paralyzed power, gas and water service for 12 hours in protest against a proposed municipal electric plant.

The strike ended shortly after noon when Fred Leucke, Warrensburg, Mo., company president, assured employes they will be given jobs in other cities if the plant is closed here. The company serves 90 other Missouri cities.

Without warning, the workers pulled switches at the plant shortly after midnight, cutting off all lights, stopping gas service and electric pumps at the city water plant.

Citizens of the town of 7,000 people first were aware of the strike when they arose this morning to find themselves without utility service.

F. J. Richardson, chief engineer, said the strikers had beds, food and water for an indefinite stay. They allowed no one to enter the plant. Strikers declared they would remain barricaded until the city council was willing to discuss a settlement, but did agree to restore power temporarily in case fire broke out in the city.

The city council precipitated the strike by voting Thursday to award contracts for a municipal plant. Councilmen had indicated union workers would not be employed.

After a conference between the strikers, Leucke and city officials service was restored "for the best interests of the city." Before capitulating, the workers asked for a special election to approve the municipal plant and that signing of contracts be deferred a week. Both requests were denied.

Building Bombed; Strike Link Hinted

Cincinnati, Sept. 4 (AP).—An explosion, which police reported was caused apparently by a bomb, shattered the interior of the American Rigging Co.'s office here tonight.

William Perry, an officer of the firm, said he was unable to give a cause for the bombing.

He said his firm recently had been engaged in moving machinery and equipment of the Norwood plant of Remington-Rand, Inc., which closed two weeks ago after negotiations failed to bring to settlement a 12-week strike of workers.

Boy, 14, Cured of Wanderlust By Months of Travel, Hunger

Donald Tobin, 14, came home last night to his mother and father in Hyattsville, Md., two months after he left with wanderlust in his heart and a dime in his pocket.

Donald, who lives at 3 Anderson street, finally wound up in New York a couple of days ago after months of wandering.

He said he found real hospitality in New York, particularly among the policemen, but, although Manhattan "is a swell place" as far as Donald is concerned, he prefers home.

According to the New York World-Telegram, Donald left home because he hated to comb his hair and wash behind his ears and because he hated to go to school. Then, too, he had a "hotfoot" for wanderlust.

So he hopped a freight and headed South—he and a change of clothes and the dime.

The farther South he got, he told New York reporters, the fewer handouts he received.

Donald assailed the hospitality of the South. He said he hiked along the dusty roads of Carolina hungry "at my tummy."

Donald was arrested in Greenville, S. C., he says.

"A detective stuck a gun in my back," Donald vows. "He asks, 'Well, why don't you run?' I thought he wanted to shoot me, so I just went to jail and they kept me there four days, feeding me nothin' but corn bread and beans. Finally they let me go."

Then, Donald says, he headed north and reached New York.

Two nights ago he asked a man "near a big, white building" for coffee money. The "nice man directed me to a door and said I'd find help inside."

Donald did.

It was the police station and the "nice man" was a detective sergeant.

Routine Order Holds Officer After Slaying

A routine detaining order was placed against a Ninth Precinct policeman yesterday after he shot and killed a colored CCC worker during efforts to quiet a disorder near Bladensburg road and M street northeast Thursday night.

Policeman Vivian H. Landrum will face a coroner's jury today to explain the shooting. The colored youth, Lawrence Basey, 27, died a few hours after he was wounded in the abdomen by Landrum's shot. The policeman said Basey was one of several colored men who attempted to free a prisoner he had arrested.

Fake Army Colonel, U. S. Agent Seized On Check Charges

A bogus Army colonel and a fake Federal agent came to at least a temporary end of their adopted careers here last night when they were arrested by Deputy United States Marshal Harry Wells. Both men were wanted on charges of passing bad checks.

The two are Edward Raines, 64, and James S. Matis, 39. The usual practice of the tall, dignified Raines was to register at a hotel as a retired Army colonel, or sometimes a general, police charged. He found it easy to cash worthless checks for large sums, they added.

Matis operated in the same fashion, the authorities alleged, but chose to play the part of a Department of Justice agent and as such had little trouble in mulcting hotel clerks.

Raines left for San Francisco last night in custody of a United States marshal. He is wanted there for violating parole. Matis, also in the custody of a marshal, was taken to Buffalo, N. Y.

U. S., State, City Police Hunting Official of RA

Forces Joined in Effort to Solve Disappearance of W. D. Amott.

By the Associated Press.

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 4.—Federal, State and city authorities joined today in efforts to solve the mysterious disappearance of Wesley D. Amott, Federal resettlement investigator and former Mormon missionary.

Amott, former resident of Salt Lake City, has not been seen since noon Tuesday, when he left the Birmingham resettlement office to go to Montgomery, 100 miles away. No trace of him has been found there.

The State police said they arrested a man booked as Frank Greene, 29, at Uniontown, Ala., Wednesday night while he was driving the missing man's car. The officers quoted him as saying he stole the automobile and that he knew nothing of Amott.

Chief Walter K. McAdory said Greene was arrested after he drove away from a filling station at Demopolis, Ala., in Amott's car without paying for gasoline. Investigators said they found a pistol in the car, but it showed no evidence of having been fired recently.

Greene told them he took the automobile from in front of a Birmingham hotel Tuesday afternoon.

In Washington, the office of Senator William H. King, of Utah, said Amott was a "man of high character," who won recognition as a missionary in England for the Church of the Latter Day Saints.

Amott was employed as a clerk in the Senator's office for several months, resigning to go with the Resettlement Administration last April.

Police Drag Creek For Body in Vain

A reported drowning in Rock Creek just below the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge late yesterday attracted 1,000 pedestrians who jammed rush-hour traffic by stopping to watch police drag the 6-foot-deep waters.

Police said that a group of children playing in the vicinity had told them they saw a man leap from a bank. Other children reported they saw a body in the water.

After dragging for about an hour police engaged a diver. He was still hunting for the body when darkness fell.

J. C. Dorr Dies; Consul of U. S. In Mexico City

Death Follows That of Wife by Six Months; Was Gassed in War.

Word was received in Washington last night of the death in Mexico City Thursday of Julian Childe Dorr, of New York. Dorr was American consul in Mexico City.

He died of tubercular complications from having been gassed in the World War, when he served with the First Division at Cantigny, where he suffered a wound that partially crippled him for life.

Dorr was the son of Mrs. Rheta Childe Dorr, journalist, war correspondent and author, and the late John Pixley Dorr. He was a nephew of Mrs. Clarke Fisher Ansley, wife of Prof. Ansley, of Columbia University, and of Cyril E. Childe, transportation counsel, of Omaha, Nebr., and a cousin of Oliver Newman, of Washington, one-time Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Wife Died March 2.

Mr. Dorr's death followed by a few hours the report that he was "seriously ill," telegraphed yesterday to the State Department by Consul General Bowman. His wife, the former Miss Jessie Theo Manheim, of Washington, died in Mexico City March 2, following a heart attack. The ashes were buried with military honors in the National Cemetery at Arlington March 14. She had served as a yeomanette, United States Naval Reserves, attached to the Navy Department.

They are survived by their daughter, Lorita, aged 10.

Mr. Door was cremated yesterday. The ashes will be brought to New York by his mother for interment.

Born in Seattle, Wash., October 14, 1896, Mr. Dorr went in childhood with his mother to New York, where he was educated and made his home until he entered the Army in May, 1917, serving until August, 1918. On his discharge from the hospital, he entered the Georgetown Service School, and in 1921 was appointed, after examination, vice consul of career and assigned to duty at Prague, in Czechoslovakia.

Thereafter, he served in Italy, two years at Naples and six years in Genoa, and in 1931 was assigned to Barbados, British West Indies. While serving there he developed tuberculosis, and was recalled to the United States for treatment in May, 1932. He spent the next three years in a sanitarium at Tupper Lake in the Adirondacks, and on February 23, 1935, was discharged and assigned to Mexico City.

His wife's death was a shock from which he never recovered. His mother joined him in Mexico City two months ago and reports of his health for a time were encouraging. Then he suffered an attack of arthritis, from which he recovered sufficiently to return to duty on crutches. The next reports received were of his serious illness and death.

His mother, Rheta Childe Dorr, was a special correspondent in Russia, France and England during the war and is the author of several books.

Mr. Whitehead had no relatives in Washington. Two nieces, who live in Chicago, survive.

Funeral services will be held early in the week. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery. The Elks will hold special services during which Mr. Whitehead's body will lie in state in the lodge room at the Elks Club.

U. S. Will Test Gas Fatal to 3 In Silo Tragedy

Experts Hope to Prevent Future Deaths; Triple Rites for Victims.

While funeral services are being held today for three persons killed Thursday by ensilage fumes in Poplar Springs, Md., Department of Agriculture chemists will begin analysis of the deadly gas in an effort to prevent further deaths from the same cause.

Dr. D. J. Price, chief chemical engineer of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, said last night that carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide or methane probably caused the death of Mrs. Ella Malinda Richards, her 9-year-old daughter, Anna, and a foster daughter, Mary Sine, 19.

Accompanied by H. E. Roethe and Max A. Bradshaw, bureau chemists, Dr. Price spent all of yesterday collecting gas samples, viewing the bodies and interviewing witnesses.

Several hundred cubic centimeters of the gas were collected by Dr. Price for analysis. The fumes kill by suffocating, rather than by poisoning, said Dr. Price.

The three victims will be buried today in the Richards' plot at Mountain Falls, their former home, near Winchester, Va. Survivors are the father and husband, John Richards, and a 11-year-old son, Calvin. They were working in a field when Anna fell into the ensilage pit. Her mother and foster sister died attempting to rescue her.

Issuing certificates of accidental death, Coroner Arthur S. Kolb, of Woodbine, Md., said no inquest was necessary.

3 Fliers Who Escaped Death Are Brought to D. C. Hospital

Three Army fliers, who escaped death when their plane crashed near Middletown, Pa., yesterday were undergoing treatment for burns in Walter Reed Hospital last night.

They are Flying Cadet William E. Greer, the pilot; Corporal John S. Cundy, observer, and Private David Martin, radio operator. They were burned in an explosion that followed the crash.

The plane, a twin-motor Martin bomber, took off from the Army Airport at Middletown, bound for Mitchell Field, where the men were stationed.

A few minutes after the take-off, it crashed, falling between two trees. The wings were torn off and the cabin fell across a road, throwing the three men out.

The first persons to arrive on the scene were amazed to find them alive. A Middletown physician found they were suffering only from burns, caused when a fuel tank exploded.

The three were flown to Bolling Field in an Army transport plane and taken by ambulance to the hospital with a motorcycle police escort.

Langley Field To Take Over 2 Bolling Units

Reorganization Is Part of Plan for Remodeling Air Service.

A "paper reorganization" is in progress at Bolling Field, the War Department announced yesterday. The Fourteenth Bombardment and Twenty-first Observation Squadrons have been transferred to Langley Field, Va., because better facilities are available there, but most of the personnel will be detached for duty at Bolling, it was learned.

The move leaves Bolling Field without a tactical or combat organization. These two functions will be taken over largely by Langley and by Mitchell Field, New York, it was said, and Bolling Field will become the War Department's communication base for the Second area.

The reorganization, which affects every unit at Bolling Feld, is a part of the plan for remodeling the national air defense service as outlined in the General Headquarters Air Force plan. The change, officers said, is in line with the setting up of Army aviation of a war-time basis to make it available for speedy service in case of emergency.

In time of war, it was explained that Army aviation traffic at Bolling Field would become many times heavier than it is today, because the field would serve as the air base for the Air Corps headquarters here. It would supply aerial messenger service and airplanes for the use of administrative personnel traveling between Washington and the tactical units.

To provide an operating organization which could handle this increased activity in time of emergency, it was decided that Bolling Field should be removed from the General Headquarters Air Force, which is a combat organization, and transferred to direct supervision of the office of the chief of the Air Corps in the War Department.

Officials said there would be practically no changes in personnel. In cases where squadrons are transferred "on paper" to other points, the officers will continue to be detailed at Bolling Field, it was said.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Washington Summer Concerts Association presents its twenty-first concert Friday night at the Potomac Watergate, with Nikolai Sokolov as guest conductor and Louis Persinger as violin soloist. Program: Overture to "Mignon" (Thomas), "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor (Schubert), Minuet (Heinz Roemheld), Slavonic Dance in A major (Dvorak), Violin Concerto in D major (Beethoven), "Pomp and Circumstance" March No. 1 (Elgar).

Under a clear and stra-strewn sky, a large audience assembled at the Watergate last night to welcome Louis Persinger, whose eloquent reading of the Beethoven concerto was the climax of the concert. In numbers the audience came close to the Sunday standard, and in the quality of applause there was manifest a hearty tribute to the visitor's artistry. Mr. Persinger was recalled seven times at the close of the performance.

The Beethoven concerto, a masterpiece unique and unapproachable in its genre, is a test of virtuosity, musicianship and interpretive insight, and in the basence of any one of these three prerequisites a performance leaves the hearer unsatisfied. Mr. Persinger has the technical facility, the musicianly sincerity, and the keenness of poetic vision demanded. Moreover, there is in his tone a persuasive sweetness, a tenderness of timbre, that made his reading memorable.

In the first movement, his handling of the extraordinary cadenza, with its contrapuntal weaving of the two themes, was brilliant, and the reprise of the principal theme was played with a rare spirituality of tone. There was warmth in his disclosure of the romantic larghetto, sucharged with Beethoven's peculiar poesy, and his reading of the rondo had a joyous elation. It was a performance richly rewarding to the listener.

Dr. Sokolov deserves his meed of praise for his alert and sensitive collaboration. The dynamics were nicely adjusted, and there was evident in his conducting a constant care for the soloist. The orchestra was responsive to a degree, as it had been shortly before in the excellent reading of the Schubert symphony.

When the late Philip Hale remarked that we should be thankful that Schubert never finished the B minor symphony, because "possibly the lost arms of the Venus of Melos might disappoint if they were found and restored," he must have had in mind the fate of the manuscript, which lay for 43 years among the dusty papers of Anselm Huettenbrenner until Johann Herbeck unearthed it. Never did a masterpiece come closer to destruction and still survive for the delectation of the world.

The novelty on the program was the minuet by Heinz Roemheld, formerly of this city. It proved to be a charming essay in the old form, melodically graceful, as vivacious as a perpetuum mobile, and very ingeniously orchestrated.

Miss Baker's Good Example.

Commissioner Allen's controversy with Miss Sibyl Baker, now happily ended, affords a somewhat disquieting anticlimax to the Commissioner's glowing reports of the WPA following his recent 7,000-mile tour. Notwithstanding the efficiency, the absence of politics and the harmony Mr. Allen found within WPA ranks in 24 States, the director of playgrounds has convinced him that two rather serious blunders have been made within his own work-relief organization. It was a little cruel for a department head of the local government thus to deflate the political effects of Mr. Allen's jaunt, but the Commissioner is big enough to smile at the irony of the situation.

With his usual candor and admirable sportsmanship, Mr. Allen has acknowledged the WPA's "error in allowing construction of two field houses on playgrounds to be halted." That, of course, ends the controversy in a spirit of good humor. But Miss Baker still insists that what she needs is a larger staff of her own and less reliance upon the WPA for playground improvements. And it must be agreed that she has effectively driven her point home.

Certainly, too, Miss Baker has enhanced her own prestige as a capable director of Washington's playgrounds. Not every local official would have maintained his position as courageously in the face of pressure from a superior for an explanation. Of course, Miss Baker knew that her complaint was justified and that the unsatisfactory work of the WPA on the playgrounds in question could not be disputed. In those circumstances she had no reasonable alternative to holding her ground.

In the voteless District, however, officials often hesitate to defend the obvious welfare of the community, fearing that a highef-up may be offended. The way in which some officials made slavish obeisance to Representative Blanton was a disgrace. Miss Baker has proved that, when a department head is right in criticizing some pet agency, he can hold his vewpoint without losing either dignity or prestige. That is a salutary precedent to establish. It should not be lost upon District officials as a group.

A Weakness In The System.

In the recent convention of the American Bar Association the "hippodroming" of justice was one of the foremost issues. The disgraceful conduct of the Hauptmann trial was vehemently condemned in a special report as well as in various addresses. Unquestionably the legal profession is aroused over the tendency to turn important trials into burlesque performances for the gratification of sadistic tastes.

Still more encouraging is the fact that the bar association is not content to voice its criticism and let the matter drop. At the suggestion of O. R. McGuire, chairman of its special committee on administrative law, the A. B. A. is offering the 1937 Roff award of $1,000 for the best essay by one of its members on one aspect of this subject. The contestants will discuss the effects of insecure tenure for administrative and judicial officers upon the administration of justice.

The importance of an independent Federal judiciary has been clearly recognized. But for prosecuting officials and many judges in State and local courts there is no such thing as a career service in this country. Usually they obtain their jobs through politics and serve only for brief periods. The average length of service for such officials has been found to be about six and a half years. Consequently, prosecutors and even judges are frequently more concerned with making an impressive record than with impartial administration of justice.

The Hauptmann trial, as conducted by a politically ambitious prosecutor, is a perfect example of this critical weakness in our judicial system. Many lawyers with no aptitude for or interest in public service use their political influence to become United States attorneys, State and county prosecutors for the sole purpose of enhancing their own prestige. Their chief objective becomes publicity. It is to their advantage to exploit notorious criminals and thus play into the hand of the sensational press. That is all a part of the political racket from which the courts have not yet been able to free themselves.

Individuals who thus lower the standards of public service may be properly censured, but it is the system which is primarily at fault. Under present conditions we put a premium upon sensational trials and blatant head-hunting. Unless this obsolete system can be changed there will not be much chance of eliminating "hippodrome" justice.

Spain's New Leadership.

The new government which has been formed at Madrid is the most radical which has yet governed Spain. But the Spain that it governs is only a beleaguered part of the nation.

With Irun conquered, following a resistance by the loyalists that lasted seven weeks, during the last three of which they were subjected to a terrific attack by greatly superior forces, the rebels are now in a position to move on San Sebastian by land.

Should that seaport fall, practically all of the Biscay coast will be in rebel hands and they will be able to release a considerable number of men, hitherto engaged in the assault on Irun, for the Guadarrama front.

But their task is far from finished. The southern rebel army under Gen. Franco is still many miles from Madrid while at Toledo the rebel garrison in the Alcazar appears to be reaching the end of its rope.

On the Aragon front the loyalists claim the capture of Huesca, which opens up the route to Saragossa. The capture of that city would more than offset the loss of Irun for it would make possible direct communications between Barcelona and Madrid and permit the Catalan government to send reinforcements to the aid of the capital.

It is clear, therefore, that a decisive victory by either side is still rather remote. The orgy of destructon and bloodletting is apparently destined to go on and on.

Hitherto the government has assumed a defensive position. Aside from scattered points in the south where loyalist bands have carried on guerrilla war against the rebels and in Aragon where the Catalans have been waging an offensive, the government's strategy has been to fight off the attacks of the rebels, possibly on the theory that, with its resources greater than those which the Burgos junta can command, time is on its side.

But now it is not unlikely that the government itself will take the offensive. The change in administrative personnel at Madrid was as much the result of discontent with the Fabian tactics pursued by the Giral regime as by a desire to reflect in the composition of the government the existing political realities at Madrid.

Giral, though well regarded, is a man without political experience and appointed only because he was a close friend of President Azana. The new premier, Largo Caballero, is the head of the U. G. T., the Spanish federation of labor, and the leader of the left wing of the Socialist Party.

It is the Socialists who, today, are the backbone of the Popular Front. But while the Socialists have been given six posts in the cabinet (one of them going to Indalecio Prieto, right-wing leader) other parties in the coalition, including the Left Republicans, the Catalan Esquerra, the Basque Nationalists and the Communists, are also to be represented.

Caballero, frequently called the "Spanish Lenin," is a man whose extreme radicalism is of relatively recent vintage. He took part in the first Azana government, which was a coalition of Republicans and Socialists. By the summer of 1934, however, he had become disillusioned about the possibilities of bringing about a peaceful evolution toward socialism in Spain. Soon after the Right assumed power in October, 1934, an uprising took place in areas under Left domination. This was put down with great ferocity, Caballero himself being imprisoned. This experience doubtless did little to moderate his views.

The new government at Madrid faces no easy task. It is beset by enormous difficulties. But the change of guard at the capital at least means the replacement of a dummy government by one which reflects the popular will in areas loyal to it.

One-Sided Planning.

In theory the reduction of middlemen's profits is a most commendable objective. Every time the cost of transferring commodities from the producer to the consumer is reduced both are likely to benefit. It should not be casually assumed from this generality, however, that all cuts in handling charges are ispo facto in the public interest.

Undersecretary Tugwell's order reducing from $52 to $34 the charge for unloading a car of poultry emphatically illustrates the danger of carrying this legitimate objective to extremes. In trying to benefit poultry producers, Dr. Tugwell has imposed a severe hardship upon a group of workers whose compensation was already relatively meager. The consequent strike is a natural result of stop-gap planning based on only one aspect of a complicated economic problem.

Officials of the Department of Agriculture insist that they have not attempted to fix the wages of men who unload poultry cars. But that is a plain evasion of the issue. Dr. Tugwell's cut in unloading charges carries an automatic reduction in the wages of men engaged in that work. The technical difference between "regulating charges" and reducing the wages which must be taken directly out of those charges is of no interest to men who are thus deprived of a living wage.

In some cases, not dissimilar to this, Administration officials have put into effect new orders without foreseeing the drastic changes they would entail. But that cannot be said of Dr. Tugwell. Before his order was issued he had been warned by the legal advisers within his own department that wage cuts resulting from lower unloading charges would bring about a strike. In spite of that, the order was issued, apparently with no attempt to protect the interests of the poultry workers.

President Roosevelt may have to intervene to forestall an injustice to this group of laborers. Beyond that, however, the controversy raises a grave question as to the advisability of entrusting so much power over the well being of diverse groups to officials whose interests ought to lie entirely in the field of agriculture.

Treasury Working Balances.

Secretary Morgenthau's announcement that the Treasury will borrow $400,000,000 in addition to refunding the $514,000,000 of notes falling due next week, surprised the financial community, coming as it did on the heels of Presidential assurances that the net addition to the Federal debt during the fiscal year would not exceed $750,000,000. With over half this sum to be added at once to the outstanding debt, the chances of keeping to the President's estimates seem very doubtful. However, it is quite futile to speculate about probable additions to the debt until the amount of new relief appropriations is known.

As the President proposed to cut down the net increase in debt by taking approximately $1,100,000,000 from the Treasury's working balance, Secretary Morgenthau has found it necessary to defend his sudden demand for a loan that will increase the present working balance to about $1,700,000,000. He explains that funds are needed to cover repayable advances to the HOLC and to anticipate delayed collection of the so-called windfall taxes. But the amounts involved are not large enough to make this explanation convincing. Hence, the decision to borrow can only be attributed to a desire to build up the cash working balance to amounts that will take care of all requirements of the current quarter and still leave the Treasury in possession of at least $1,000,000,000.

Maintenance of such a huge volume of idle funds, far in excess of amounts formerly regarded as ample, is difficult to justify, although Secretary Morgenthau offers as a feeble excuse the existence of unsettled conditions abroad. His opinion that these excessive balances constitute "the safest and cheapest insurance fund" that the American people could have against unforeseen happenings is certainly not shared by former Comptroller General McCarl. On the contrary, Mr. McCarl heartily approves using Treasury cash balances to reduce borrowing. The proposal "if actually followed," he says, would not only avoid interest costs but "tend to minimize temptation to go on a spending spree."

From the Treasury's point of view, it is no doubt a very comfortable sensation to have large amounts of idle cash on hand to meet possible emergencies. To Secretary Morgenthau, accustomed to dealing in billions, the cost of carrying a balance of $1,000,000,000 at present borrowing rates no doubt seems a mere bagatelle. But it does not appear so trifling to taxpayers.

Time Out For Romance.

It is obvious that man's material interests have benefited through his advance toward speed-mastery. First the telegraph and telephone, then the radio have improved communication so as almost to abolish old rules of time and space. First the railways, then the steamship, now the airship have multiplied the fruits of commerce. But the Zeppelin had to become a commonplace to demonstrate that all this material progress is not dulling to those emotions commonly supposed to be seated in the heart.

In the Tennysonian spring, an officer of the United States Navy and a passenger from Peoria board the Hindenburg for its eastward voyage—strangers. They meet at dinner. Less than 72 hours later, they part in Germany—but only temporarily. En route, they have arrived at a little understanding which results, this week, in their wedding in New York.

Who now may say that the hurry of our age has left love little place and no time? Modernism has merely raised romance to the tempo whereto it has raised everything else. Upon the stream-lined Zeppelin the same moon shines, "fair regent of the night," that looked down on the decks of romantic clipper ships. The same stars evoke the same sighs. And, throughout an air trip, the sunsets make up in quality far more than they lose in quantity.

A sea voyage was ever an invitation to Eros; so is it now, though high above the water. But whereas it used to require weeks for fruition it now takes little more than two days.

People use a Zeppelin to save time, and on a Zeppelin they find time to fall in love. They will still find it when they ride in a rocket to Mars.

The disease most dreaded by doctors is amnesia. So many of their patients contract it and can't remember to pay their bills.

The reason the average girl would rather have beauty than brains is because men who can see so greatly outnumber those who can think.

Faint Praise.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

If his own unsupported story is true, Amerigo Vespucci, 45-year-old Florentine sailor, first landed on the South American continent in 1497. There is evidence that he lied; that he was in Spain at the time. Nevertheless letters he wrote describing a trip to the New World fell into the hands of Martin Waldeseemuller, German geographer, who used them in a book and suggested that the new land be named for Amerigo.

Roosevelt and Recovery.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To the man and woman of average intelligence, regardless of their political affiliations, it would appear that there must be some motive, other than true democracy, on the part of certain interests and individuals, to discredit the administration of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Having been a dyed-in-the-wool-moss-back Republican for over 30 years, who believed in a high protective tariff and an advocate of the gold standard and sound money, I feel that I may speak freely, write and publish my sentiments, as a humble Republican of the Old Guard.

When Mr. Roosevelt took the oath of office the country was prostrate. Commodity prices had experienced a perpendicular decline. Millions of people were unemployed and our domestic situation was chaotic. In 1931 during the Hoover Administration over 2,290 banks with deposits of $1,759,000,000,000 closed their doors and 17,000 retail stores failed. Bank deposits declined by $5,000,000,000. Leading industrial stocks on the New York Stock Exchange dropped from 200 to 300 per cent of their market value. Hundreds of municipalities faced bankruptcy and thousands of municipal employes were thrown out of employment.

To deal with this situation President Roosevelt summoned the Congress and kept it in session for many months. The banking situation was quickly adjusted and bank deposits insured up to $5,000. Millions of people were fed, clothed, housed and given employment on Federal relief projects. Admitting that there might have been some "bugs" in the NRA and the AAA, we must not lose sight of the fact that Mr. Roosevelt was administering to a very sick nation at a time when most any experiment was worth trying.

Therefore it would be unpatriotic to deny Mr. Roosevelt the unstinted and whole-hearted praise that should at least be his portion. Yet in spite of these achievements a number of Democratic leaders, together with the Republican Party, are charging the President with retarding recovery.

This method of defeating Mr. Roosevelt in the November election may have originated in the mind of some "brilliant" Republican or Democratic genius. But the average man and woman who has tasted the depression in its bitterest form will swallow this pill with a grain of salt.

Employment For Veterans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The editorial entitled "Jobs, Not Pensions," appearing in The Post of September 2, contains an unwarranted false statement in the fourth paragraph, by stating that "Millard W. Rice, legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, has let it be known that unless present benefits are liberalized and more extensive preferences in employment are granted, that organization will demand general pensions for veterans at the next session of Congress."

I have not made any such statement to any one, nor can any such assumption be inferred from my quoted statements in the special front page article, written by Robert C. Albright, in the September 1 issue of The Post.

Our organization is not on record in favor of a general pension system for all veterans, and it would therefore be presumptuous for me to indicate what policy a future national encampment might adopt relative thereo.

Very probably our coming national encammoent in Denver, Colo., September 13 to 18, will, among other things, reiterate its vigorous advocacy of: (1) adequate pensions for widows and orphans of all deceased war veterans; (2) liberalized provisions for under-compensated, competitively unemployed, disabled veterans; (3) liberalized service connections to provide for equitably service-connectable disabled veterans, by giving more consideration to the type and circumstances of a veteran's military service, especially as to those who served in the front lines and over seas; and (4) more effective veteran employment and civil service preference laws, such as now exist in several other countries.

The V. F. W. has been very cooperative with, and is grateful to, the U. S. Employment Service and its Veterans Placement Service, the Works Progress Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, and all other governmental agencies for providing private or public employment to several hundred thousand veterans, and will continue its cooperation with these agencies, and with private employers, to this end.

Unfortunately, however, there are still several hundred thousand veterans who are still unemployed, and because of increasing age and disability, this problem tends to become more pressing. Veterans generally would much prefer to have permanent, suitable, gainful employment than either compensation for service-connected disability or pension for non-service-connected disability.

It is not a "whip" or a "threat," but just a statement of fact, to say that, if increasing hundreds of thousands of veterans are, or become, unemployed, they will have to be taken care of in other ways, either by relatives, friends, private or public charity, by unemployment "doles" or some other form of relief. We are seeking a way to avoid the necessity of pensions for partial non-service-connected disabled veterans. We believe the assurance of opportunity for suitable, gainful, permanent employment to be the solution.

Other governments have, in varying degrees, given that assurance to their disabled veterans, or their wives, and their widows. Not only are positive preferences provided as to all types of governmental positions for which veteran applicants possess the required qualifications, but certain classifications of governmental jobs are reserved for and filled only by disabled veterans, and certain other classifications of governmental jobs are filled only by veterans, their wives, or their widows.

Such definite preferences, not now existing with any comparable effectiveness in this country, are justified on the ground that such veterans served their country in its armed forces during a time of national emergency with resulting loss of time and in resulting economic, industrial, or disability handicap, and that their country should, therefore, in recognition of such service, extend to them the preferred opportunity for governmental, and also private, jobs for which they are individually qualified.

This is a far-sighted economy, resulting in less need for pensions, and a far-sighted patriotism, giving assurance to possible future veterans that they will not be permitted to become merely "forgotten heroes."

Carefully prepared reports and detailed recommendations, as to the above-mentioned perplexing problems and others, will be considered at our national encampment, after which we should be pleased to have your newspaper open its columns for a presentation of our entire veteran, alien, Americanism, and national defense program.

Sample of Bad Driving.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Yesterday afternoon I was in Silver Spring, Md., and while there I saw the demonstration put on by the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles of Maryland, in his safety campaign.

The showing of the right and wrong ways to make stops, turns, etc., was very good. I have seen all the wrong ways down town, and I must say that it is only by the grace of God that there aren't more killed and maimed.

This morning I parked on a through street near an intersection supposed to be controlled by a stop sign. I had nearly a half an hour to wait, so I kept tabs on all motor vehicles approaching that intersection.

Here is what I found on my count of 100 vehicles: five made no attempt whatsoever to stop, didn't even slow down; six stopped, but in the cross walk; five slowed, shifted and came out, forcing oncoming traffic to stop for them; 73 slowed, but kept rolling, shifted to second, and came on.

Only six came to a dead stop in the correct place behind the crosswalk. Only three signalled by hand their intention to stop.

The intersection mentioned, is almost directly across from a public school of the lower grades, in the northwest section. Very soon there will be a rush of small children, morning, noon, and evening—just about the same time as the traffic peak is reached.

Most of us are ruled by habit. Once a driver gets into the habit of slipping through stop signs carelessly, even in places where the traffic is light, he is bound to do the same where it will cause an accident, sooner or later.

Just think, you who drive, only six out of 100, actually stopped where they should have, and only three of them gave the hand stop signal. Those few seconds you save may mean the loss of years of life or physical freedom to some little one.

Won't you drive safely and sanely?

Atrocities in Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When I think of the terrible atrocities which have been perpetrated in Spain by both sides since the outbreak of the civil war, I don't understand why the civilized nations don't demand that they cease this savage butchery of human lives. By this I do not mean to advocate interference as such in their internal troubles.

Since they have brought this deplorable state of affairs upon themselves, they themselves will have to find a way out. But when the belligerents no longer respect or value human life, when they decimate men as they would insects, then I think that nations, in the name of civilization, ought to step in and put an end to this lowest form of barbarism.

Fascism does not appeal to me, and I have no love for communism. But contrary to what Communist writers tell us, the Communists are at the root of such ruthlessness and degradation, and not the insurgents. Communists have brought no peace to the nations in which they have settled; and these nations will never enjoy peace as long as communism continues to stir up people against religion, justice, liberty. This is self-evident.

When then I read some writers telling us how kind, mild, gracious, pleasant, tame, harmless, congenial the representatives and followers of communism are, I become justly enraged. For I wonder if these people think we are as foolish, ignorant and gullible as they would like us to be.

Here in America, Communists may wear a kind, pleasant face; but nevertheless they are indoctrinated with the same principles of cruelty, mercilessness, destruction, atrocity. In fact, they have already planted here the seeds of such atrociousness. This ought to be a warning to us. For if we will not soon uproot these pernicious weeds, or if we continue to look indifferently upon communism, then I venture to predict that we are going to have the same slaughter-house here as they have in Spain, Mexico and Russia.

The Post Impressionist

"And Hold The Butter!"

Post Office, Saturday.

"IF you don't eat at soda-lunch counters," said the young fellow who works at a certain one on Pennsylvania avenue, "you don't know much about them. —Or do you eat at them sometimes?"

The Post-Impressionist replied that he sometimes ate at them.

"Well, then—or even if you do," the soda-lunch worker elucidated, "they'll stand a lot of study. I kind of thought you might eat at them.

"But even so.

"You'd be surprised," he continued, "the people who do eat there. People think we only get people who don't belong to any clubs—or work too far away from home lunch time. They're all wrong.

"I'm not saying those sort of people aren't the most we have. But they're not all.

"The fact is we have every sort of people. I was reading in one of the books off the book counter over there the other night——

("You know, they give us fellows that work here—and the girls, too, they do—they give us a discount on those books. Take the price out of your pay envelope. It's an opportunity.)

"Well, I was reading in one of them the other night here, where it said about a bridge in Constantinople—the Golden Trombone, or something like that—how there used to be such a crowd going over it, if you only stood there on it and waited long enough, you'd see almost anybody you could think of, and I thought right away then—I thought:

"'Our counter's like that—it's like the Golden Trombone.'

"You see, nearly everybody's walking up or down Pennsylvania Avenue in a hurry at lunch time some time or other in their life. So they're bound to stop in at a soda-lunch counter there for lunch sometime.

"I admit we've never had the President—yet. At least, not since he's been the President. But then he's always right at home in the White House, lunch times. His work's right by his dining room.

"Still, at that I bet he's been in here when he was in the Navy Department . . .

"Who? Mr. Garner? Oh, you mean the Vice President. I don't know about him, either. I'm not so well acquainted with his pictures like I am with Mr. Roosevelt's . . .

"Still, we've had Secretary Wallace—believe it or not. Secretary Wallace was in here just a couple of weeks ago—maybe three.

"There was a regular jam to wait on him when somebody passed the word who it was. I couldn't get very near him—my post's at the far end, being a new hand—but I got near enough to hear him talk. He asked how was the apple pie, and then he said:

"'Well, then, I'll take some apple pie and a glass of buttermilk.'

"Made a hit with the whole gang of us, that did. Kind of nice. Kind of an old-fashioned sort of taste it showed.

"I can always tell the men that aren't used to soda-lunch counters," this soda-lunch counterman went on. "Not women: there aren't any women aren't used to them. But men.

"They'll look as if they were ashamed to be seen at a soft-drink bar, the men that aren't used to soda-lunch counters will. And they'll generally order a ham sandwich and a cup of coffee.

"That sets their date: Before Prohibition . . .

"A good many people think the majority of people that patronize soda-lunch counters are women. Matter of fact, they're not. Matter of fact, the majority of soda-lunch counter patrons are men—and that goes for the customers that come in just for a drink of soda, too. I'll bet we sell twice as many chocolate ice cream sodas to men as we sell them to women. Our men customers are mostly full-grown men, but they're mostly men who weren't of age in Before Prohibition . . .

"Funny thing: Most the women that take chocolate ice cream sodas want vanilla ice cream in it, and most of the men want chocolate ice cream . . .

"What? . . .

"No, I don't know why. It's just so, that's all . . .

"Still, I'll tell you something I do know: it's not so hot, all this talk about women eating ice cream and cake for lunches, and men roast beef sandwiches. Lots of our men patrons take a malted milk mixture, and, of course, you couldn't expect women to, being the way milk's supposed fattening. But there's more men than you'd think order just a sundae and jelly cake. Mostly, the women want solid food. Mebbie the man have stronger stomachs. But it's so, anyhow.

"You can learn a lot behind a soda-lunch counter if you want to. It's an opportunity."

Fair Enough

Probabilities.

Strutting his stuff at the highbrows' old home week at Harvard University, Dr. Ronald A. Fisher, of London, referred to problems of uncertain inference in the mathematics of probability. This is a field in which all of us have done a little research from time to time, and Dr. Fisher might be surprised to hear of regular public clinics in the mathematics of probability, attended by thousands of students.

The clinic at Saratoga, recently closed after the annual session of one month, yielded general results which nobody has been able to understand. At the Saratoga clinic both the bookmakers and the customers who bet against the books lost money on the season. This was not an unusual case. It is the almost invariable result and presents a puzzle quite as knotty as that discovered by another scientist who reported at the highbrows' old home week.

This other scientist, Prof. Kasner, of Columbia, reported that in certain problems the sum of the parts exceeds the sum of the whole. This created a stir among the learned men, but they have yet to hear of a problem in which the sum of the parts is a net deficit. This, however, is a phenomenon long familiar to those who attend Saratoga, Belmont and certain other clinics. They do not pretend to understand it. They only know it always comes out that way, and the problem is offered to the scientists with deep respect but with no hope fo solution.

The mathematics of probability fascinates more devotees, in one or another of the specialized fields, than any other subject of inquiry. The master problem is as follows: Given the entries for seven races, weigh the mathematical probabilities, including scratches, stimulants, condition, disposition, accidents, weights and ages, select the winner of each race, placing a $10 bill on the first winner and shoving it all back, cumulatively, until the end of the card.

This has never been done in actual practice in all the history of the study of mathematical probability. It has often been done mentally, however, on the train or bus, going to the track and retroactively, by busted scientists on the way back. My data record a brave effort one day at Saratoga by Uncle Will Gibson, an earnest student, who used to manage Benny Leonard and Gene Tunney. Uncle Will had only $100 for experimental material that day but won $700 on the first race and put the $800 back on the record, where he won $4,000. He used the $4,000 for his third experiment, which was succesful and planned to dump the entire $19,200 into the fourth step of the inquiry.

At this point, however, the probabilities began to eat themselves up, for the $19,200 caused a stir among the scientists in charge of the handbooks, and they reduced the odds on his next horse to something like the return from a long-haul investment in suburban real estate. So Uncle Will abandoned his fourth selection in favor of another steed of inferior probability but longer price, and that one stopped to graze on daisies over in the backstretch.

So Uncle Will's experiment failed at a very promising stage of the problem, and he rode home on his thumb that night pondering the tricky nature of mathematics of probablility. For the fourth hide of his original formula won that race, and Uncle Will, had he stuck to his intentions, would have had about $25,000 with which to experiment on the fifth horse, which also won, with Uncle Will Gibson standing idly by with only an academic interest in the result. I never asked whether his sixth horse won, too. After all, what did it matter?

• • • •

But, like most of the scientists who attack such problems, Uncle Will arrived at a curious result in reckoning his loss. He placed his loss at $100, not $19,200.

"Only $100 of it was mine," he said. "The other $19,100 was theirs."

A scientist named George Henry Fisher, of Los Angeles—probably no relation of Dr. Ronald A. Fisher, of London—once wrote a book on the mathematics of probability as encountered in stud poker. This book reduced to exact figures the probabilities affecting inside straights, full houses, flushes and other phenomena, with due allowance for the number of hands dealt, the hands folded, the required cards in sight on the table and the probability of required cards buried in the deck or in the hole. It is a fascinating work, but of little use in practical experiment. By the time a scientist has studied the cards in sight and found the answer in the book someone else has mastered the probabilities by sheer chance, and there is a new deal going.

But even George Henry Fisher drew the line on certain abstruse probabilities. He scornfully refused to bend his intellect to the problems of seven-card stud with the deuces and sevens wild, dismissing the challenge with the evasive judgment that this was a ladies' game unworthy of the study of a serious scientist.

Black Legion Emblems Burned at Mont Alto, Pa.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., Sept. 4.—Blazing triangles, symbols of the Black Legion, which has been terrorizing the northwest, have burned twice in the Mont Alto section, north of here, and the community is seeking an answer to the acts. On Monday evening a triangle was burned on the hill of Rose Hill Cemetery, overlooking the small town. On another evening this week a similar occurrence took place on a hill at the western edge of the town.

So far town officials have been unable to determine whether there are actually Black Legionnaires in the community or whether a prank is being enacted to excite inhabitants.

Dictators And Dupes

Potential Combatants Seeking To Persuade World They Are Embarked On Crusade To Smash Communism—Or Fascism.

By Barnet Nover.

A DAY before Germany declared war on Russia, and while Europe was sliding toward but had not yet slipped into the maelstrom that engulfed it from 1914 to 1918, the German government declared a Kriegsgefahrzustand, a state of threatening danger of war.

In this one need not stress any presumed parallel between the international situation in Europe today and what it was on the eve of conflict in 1914. That parallel is faulty in so many particulars as to be distinctly misleading. But the fact is nevertheless undeniable that all Europe has, without the formality of official proclamations such as marked the action of Germany on July 31, 1914, begun to assume and to act on the assumption that it is now in a "state of threatening danger of war."

Not otherwise is it possible to explain the frenzied military preparations that are being made, the equally feverish diplomatic maneuvers, and not least the propaganda that has been launched by the potential combatants to justify in advance the warlike action that may soon be taken. The world conflict of 1914-1918 began as a war but soon developed into a crusade. The situation is now reversed. The crusade has been launched in anticipation of war.

The lesson has not been lost on the nations that material forces alone, certainly the material forces that any one nation commands, are inadequate for the winning of a large-scale war. It is recognized that military and diplomatic preparations must be accompanied by the stiffening of the morale of the people at home and by the conquest of the minds and hearts of groups abroad.

In 1914, British Liberals, seeking to persuade themselves of the justness of a war whose outbreak they had bitterly opposed, invented the myth that the war was not a war between nations such as had plagued the world from time immemorial, but a crusade, a struggle between Right and Might, the death grapple between freedom and despotism, a "war to end war." This myth, later accepted by President Wilson and given the backing of his enormous prestige, did yeoman service for the Allied cause. Against this dogma German counter-propaganda struggled in vain.

But in anticipation of the next war the present German rulers are determined not to be behindhand. Although the Third Reich, like the first, is from first to last motivated by purely nationalist considerations, as are all other nations, Nazi world aims are being cloaked in holy garments designed to appeal to outsiders who might have no interest and even be hostile to Germany's nationalist program. The same is true of Russia. If the diplomatic struggle in Europe today centers around these two powers it is to no small extent because they appear as champions of rival ideologies of world significance.

Russia First In Field With Dogma.

In this impending battle of dogmas Russia was first in the field. As far back as 1918 it proclaimed the doctrine of world revolution. To be sure the anticipations of Lenin regarding the imminence of social upheavals elsewhere in Europe similar to that which occurred in Russia, proved faulty. The Hungarian Soviet regime was but a flash in the pan. The Spartacist movement in Germany was snuffed out by the German Social Democratic republic. Italy went Fascist rather than Communist. Yet the doctrine of world revolution remained the official creed of Russian communism nevertheless. The reason for this was, at first because hope survived that the world would tomorrow or the day after follow Russia's example and later because it came to be recognized that the doctrine had its distinct value to Russia's nationalist aims.

Nowhere since 1919 has communism constituted a real threat to the economic or political systems in any outside nation. But the presence everywhere of Communist groups was nonetheless of considerable value to Russia. It meant that within nations that looked with hostility upon Russia there were centers of resistance to a new interventionist move against the Soviet Union. And while, as a consequence of Stalin's victory over Trotzky, the policy of "permanent revolution" was scrapped in favor of a policy of building socialism within Russia itself, regardless of what might occur elsewhere in the world, Russia was not prepared to drop its Communist allies.

As the shadows of war have grown deeper, as Russia has come to believe that its very existence is threatened by the aims and ambitions of Germany and Japan, the existence of these pro-Russian groups in countries hostile to the Soviet or in neutral lands has been viewed as a distinct asset. For if a war against the Soviet might be transformed into a civil struggle nations might hesitate before embarking on such a war.

It is without a doubt the desire to retain its Communist allies of the Third Internationale and prevent them from shifting their allegiance from the Communistic Pope at Moscow to the Communist anti-Pope at Noerfess, Norway, that explains the fury of the Russian government's assault on Trotzky. Could the accusation against him be made to stick, that with the assistance of the Gestapo he plotted the assassination of Stalin and the seizure of the Soviet government, Communists, however much they might be perturbed by Russia's failure to come to the effective aid of the Leftist government in Spain, would have no alternative but to continue their support of Moscow.

But, in any case, there is no denying the fact that Russia today is pursuing a purely nationalist, rather than a revolutionary internationalist policy; a policy which is defensive rather than aggressive. Today Russia is far more interested in uniting with all those who oppose fascism than in hastening the day of world revolution.

However, Russia remains the symbol of social upheaval and radical revolution. It is, therefore, the target of all those whose opposition to communism and everything they choose to regard as communism, whether it is the French Popular Front, the Spanish loyalists or even the mild and somewhat muddled but thoroughly American reformism of the New Deal.

It is an interesting fact that it is not Italy, the fountainhead of Fascism, but Germany which is attempting to unite behind it all anti-Communist elements. Although he arose to power in consequence of an alleged threat of a Communist coup d'etat, Mussolini's attitude toward Russia has never been unfriendly. There was no essential conflict of interests between Italy and Russia, and as for Communist intrigue within the Italian kingdom, Mussolini was certain he could take care of that. But from the moment the Nazi regime came into power in Germany it has been not only anti-Communist (and for that matter also anti-Socialist, anti-Liberal and anti-Jewish) but also anti-Russian. In "Mein Kampf" Hitler made it clear that Germany's expansion must be at the expense of Russia, an idea that found reflection in Alfred Hugenberg's statement to the World Economic Conference of 1933 and in the writings of Alfred Rosenberg.

Russia's reply was to join the circle of powers surrounding the Third Reich. No other event has so irritated the Nazis as the establishment of the Franco-Russian and Russo-Czech alliances, coupled as these were by a rapprochement between Russia and Rumania as the essential link in the Franco-Russian combination.

Russia Bogye Raised By Nazis.

But within France and within Czechoslovakia and within Rumania and for that matter in every other country, except Russia, there are elements intensely suspicious of Russia and imbued with hate against communism. Germany has now begun a drive to win them as allies and has in large measure succeeded. French Nationalists, though suspicious of Germany, would rather join hands with Hitler than with Russia. In Rumania the downfall of Titulescu is regarded as a victory for the Nazified Iron Guard and defeat for the pro-French and pro-Russian element. The Vatican, though distrusting Hitler, for what he has done against the church in Germany, is nevertheless willing to ally itself with him in a war against communism.

Everywhere the struggle has divided nations. The crusade against communism, the counter-crusade against fascism, cut across national lines. It is naturally most intense in democratic countries where freedom for the dissemination of lies and propaganda as well as of truth, still prevails. The International of nationalisms, in Sir Norman Angell's striking phrase, is prepared to combat the Internationale of communism. In that struggle democratic peoples, who might with justice say: "A plague on both your houses!" are being, willy-nilly, drawn in.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

That G. O. P. Essay Contest.

Mr. Bill Hard,
The Republican National Committee,

Dear Mr. Hard:

I see where the Republicans are offering $1,000 in prizes for the best essays on "Why I Am for Roosevelt," and I hereby enter the competion. I am for Roosevelt because he is the best President we have had in this country since Hoover. I am for Roosevelt because of his humble origin among the green hills of Vermont, his work in the Boston police strike and his work in the Philippines.

• • • •

I am for Roosevelt because of his splendid record as police commissioner of New York City, his fearless exposure of nature fakers and his memorable leadership of the Rough Riders. I have traced his career from his boyhood days in Middlesex and his youthful service in China as an American engineer up through his debates with Douglas, his life as a struggling attorney in Springfield, Ill., and his victory in the 1936 Kentucky Derby over Granville.

• • • •

Alfred DeMossmano Roosevelt! What magic there is in the name! I came to know him intimately through our common association with the illustrious Thomas Jefferson. We were on the famous River of Doubt expedition together, and well do I recall his famous Bwano Tumbo ultimatum, "Pedicardis alive or Rasuli dead!" at the time of the Walker trial in the Oklahoma oil fields. Of course in those days he was only a small independent oil prospector.

• • • •

I am for Roosevelt because of his confidence in Gen. Grant when all others were without faith in him. I am for Roosevelt because of his kindness toward the youthful union sentry found asleep on duty. I am for Roosevelt because of his part in building the Panama Canal, his "Get Cervera!" edict, his early exploit in sinking a ship across the entrance to Havana Harbor, his fearless message to Garcia and his discovery of insulin, Carl Hubbell, the ultra-violet ray, and the saliva test now used on all tracks.

• • • •

I am for Roosevelt because I could use $1,000. I am for Roosevelt because the Republican Party must be nuts if it is paying people to tell why they are for Roosevelt.

• • • •

And in closing let me say I am for Roosevelt because so far nobody has offered $1,000 for a letter telling why I am for Landon.

Trusting this letter makes about as much sense as your offer, I am,

Yours, ELMER TWITCHELL.

Indians Must Vanish From U. S., Says Chief

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 4 (AP).—The Indian must vanish, so that his traditions will never die.

So said Chief William Shelton, hereditary leader of the Snohomish tribe, today after another session of instructing white boys and girls in the fast-dying rituals of his race. He has been an Indian folklore instructor for years.

"We are the children of nature," Chief Shelton said. "We are closest to the trees and birds. But I know that the only future for my people is assimilation by their white brothers . . . we must mix. Our race must vanish so that our spirit may live."

Text of Roosevelt Address

By the Associated Press.

Hannibal, Mo., Sept. 4.—Here is the text of President Roosevelt's speech here today in dedicating the Mark Twain Memorial Bridge.

"It is with earnest American pride and with a glory in American tradition that I enjoy this happy privilege today, joining in this tribute to one who impressed himself upon the lives of youth everywhere in the last four score years and ten.

"To look out across this pleasant vista where the life of Mississippi River boyhood was captured and recorded for posterity and to have a part in its commemoration is a privilege I am happy to experience.

"No American youth has knowingly or willingly escaped the lessons, the philosophy and the spirit which beloved Mark Twain wove out of the true life of which he was a part along this majestic river. Abroad, too, this peaceful valley is known around the world as the cradle of the chronicles of bouyant boyhood.

"Mark Twain and his tales still live, though the years have passed and time has wrought its changes on the Mississippi. The little white town drowsing in the sunshine of the days of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer has become a metropolis of northeastern Missouri.

"The tiny handful of complacent population has grown to 23,000 souls, the seventh largest city in your State and the fourth in bustling industry. The old steamboat landing still is there—the railroads and the buses and the trucks have not ended water transportation on the river.

"It was my privilege last year to have a part in the opening of the centennial commemoration of Mary Twain's birth place. On that occasion from the White House I pressed a key which caused a light to shine from the tall tower on Cardiff Hill—The Mark Twain memorial lighthouse. The perpetuation of Mark Twain's name, birthplace and the haunts of his youth are very dear to me, especially because I, myself, as a boy, had the happy privilege of shaking hands with him. That was a day I shall never forget. With every American who has ever been a boy, I thrill today at this great structure joining two great States in the commemoration of youths immortal.

"When old Moses D. Balis found his way to the junction of the Hannibal and the Mississippi back in 1818, he little thought of the great stage of happy youth on which he was lifting the curtain. Likewise he and the older folks of the tiny river settlement in Hannibal had little thought that Sam Clemens, playing about the steamboat landing, would live through the ages.

"Likewise they had little thought that the cabins and the frame houses and the whitewashed fences would give way to thriving industrial plants, modern buildings, a splendid city hall and other impressive public structures.

"In place of the schoolhouse from which Huck Finn lured Tom Sawyer to truancy and the old swimming hole, you have 18 modern grade schools, a high school, parochial schools and a fine library.

"The old cabins and the oil lamps which Tom Sawyer had to fill are gone. In their place you have one of the most successful municipal electric light and power plants in the country.

"And today we mark one more step of progress—one more imprint of a changing order—this great structure spanning the Mississippi. The river ferry started to go when the old railroad bridge joined Missouri and Illinois back in 1870. As the years went by, this structure carried the rail, the horse drawn and the motorized commerce in and out of Hannibal across the Mississippi. Time has now taken another step and today we eliminate the hazards of railroad crossings, of high waters and mixed rail and vehicular traffic.

"This bridge stands symbolic of what can be accomplished by the co-operation of local governments with the Federal. Here, in this act of progress, we find the Federal Government. The City of Hannibal, the State of Missouri and the State of Illinois, all joined in correlated action. Together they have given you this free bridge. Working together in the days to come, they will greatly further the prosperity and convenience of the people of the United States."

Death At Twelve Feet

By William Lyon Phelps.

On Duelling.

I received from Mr. William E. Bush a copy of a most interesting book called "Savannah Duels and Duellists, 1733-1877," by Thomas Gamble, published in 1923, at Savannah by the Review Publishing & Printing Co. It is copiously illustrated and contains an account of duels, some of which had an important effect on American history. Here is the account of the duel where a signer of the Declaration of Independence lost his life.

"The duel between McIntosh and Gwinnett was the closing clash between two determined, impetuous, courageous men, both devoted to republican principles, but each also governed by personal impulses and ambitions . . . He challenged Gen. McIntosh to immediate mortal combat. The next morning, May 16, 1777, they met . . . four paces, or 12 feet apart, they faced each other. Both men were accustomed to firearms, and at that short distance it is not surprising that both fell at the first exchange of shots. Both men were wounded in the thigh. In the morning of May 19 Gwinnett died, while McIntosh was confined for some time. . . ."

• • • • •

Dr. Lyman Hall, who had signed the Declaration of Independence immediately under the name of Gwinnett, and who had been his close friend and supporter, wrote to Roger Sherman, one of the signers from Connecticut, as follows:

"Here it was (in Assembly) that the Genl. called him (as 'twas said) a Scoundrell and lying Rascal—I confess I did not hear the words, not being so nigh the parties. A Duel was the consequence, in which they were placed at 10 or 12 foot Distance. Discharged their Pistols nearly at the same time. Each wounded in the Thigh. Mr. Gwinnett's thigh broke so that he fell—on which ('tis said, the Genl. asked him if he chose to take another shot—was answered Yes, if they would help him up (or words nearly the same). The seconds interposed.

"Mr. Gwinnett was brought in, the Weather extremely hot. A Mortification came on—he languished from that Morning (Friday) till Monday Morning following and expired.

"O Liberty. Why do you suffer so many of your faithful sons, your warmest Votaries, to fall at your Shrine. Alas, my Friend, my Friend.

"Excuse me, Dear Sir, the man was valuable, so attached to the Liberty of this State and Continent that his whole Attention, Influence and Interest centered in it, and seemed riveted to it. He left a mournful Widow and Daughter and I may say the Friends of Liberty on a whole Continent to deplore his Fall."

3 More Flour Mills Closed by Strikes

Minneapolis, Sept. 4 (AP).—The flour milling industry was tied up completely tonight after strike picketing resulted in the closing of the plants of three concerns which had continued operation.

Officials of Washburn-Crosby, Inc., the Northwestern Consolidated Milling Co. and the King Midas Mill Co. announced shutdowns effective with the close of today's grind after a crowd of strike sympathizers, estimated by union officials at 1,000, stopped employes from reporting for work.

On Wednesday the Pillsbury mill, one of the largest in the country, quit grinding. Some 40 elevators in the city also have ceased operations.

The walkout started three weeks ago, when the Flour, Feed, Cereal and Elevator Workers Union called its members out to enforce demands for union recognition and wage adjustments.

British Troops Ready To Sail for Palestine

London, Sept. 4 (AP).—The war office tonight announced troops were being held in readiness for transport to Palestine where disorders continued unabated throughout the day. Part of the army reserves were called out, and maneuvers were canceled.

The war office's moves were made as it was learned another British soldier had been killed and two injured in a sabotaged train near Kalkilieh.

The number of additional troops ready for Palestine duty was believed to be in the neighborhood of 6,000.

Right to Sell Holdings Of Will Rogers Asked

Claremore, Okla., Sept. 4 (AP).—Permission to sell for taxes the Oklahoma land holdings of Will Rogers, the late humorist, was granted by Judge H. H. Brown, of Rogers County, today.

Friends of the family said the hearing was a move to marshal assets of the estate, against which about $175,000 in State and Federal taxes is pending.

The Rogers family is expected to bid in the property at a public auction sale about October 15.

Marion Zioncheck

Washington Congressman Painted Against Background Of Native State And Upbringing, Revealing More Than An Alcoholic.

Following are excerpts from an article by Richard L. Neuberger which appeared in a recent issue of the Nation:

HUNDREDS of newsboys, longshoremen, peace advocates, college students, railroad workers, farmers, and lumberjacks attended the funeral of the Representative from the First Washington District. The death of Marion Zioncheck deprived these people of a sincere friend and courageous champion, who had come from their ranks and had kept faith with them in the measures he supported on Capitol Hill. His casket was covered with a quilt of flowers and wreaths sent by the State's labor unions and liberal organizations.

What sort of person was Marion Zioncheck? What were his political views? From the first of the year until his spectacular death here last week Zioncheck received more attention than any other public figure except the President. Relatively few of the millions amused by his exploits knew his opinions or his background. To them he was merely a haywire alcoholic who waded in fountains.

But this was only the last phase of his career. Until his mental collapse in January he was a brilliant young liberal who might one day have been the dominant political figure in the Pacific Northwest. Zioncheck came to the United States from Poland in 1903. His family moved westward to the State of Washington three years later, and at 6 Marion began working his way through school. In the course of his education he sold newspapers, herded cattle and peddled fish along the wharves of Puget Sound. He entered the State university when he was 19, but was forced to withdraw in order to help support his parents and sister. He worked for a time as a clerk in a jewelry store and then had odd jobs in various lumber camps.

After four years he returned to the university. Coming from a background of oppression and hardships, he was first aroused by the snobbery of the fraternity system. He banded the independent, unaffiliated students into a compact political organization and insisted on democracy in campus life and activities. In 1928 he was elected president of the student body. He immediately objected to a series of extravagant expenditures for athletic equipment, maintaining that they would delay the construction of a much-needed study and recreational center. A troop of behemoth football players, angered by such outrageous interference with the "gravy train," dressed up one night in hooded robes, and after shaving off Zioncheck's hair threw him into Lake Washington. The local Hearst paper was privy to this amateur fascism, and a photographer was on hand to make a flashlight picture of the episode.

Rebellious In College Carried Over In Later Days.

BUT ZIONCHECK was no mere college rebel. As soon as he became a member of the bar in 1929 he began defending deportees and others in danger of losing their civil rights. With Jack R. Cluck he argued a succession of cases for the Civil Liberties Union. He was an enthusiastic admirer of Senator George Norris, and in 1931 he interested himself in the public-ownership fight in Seattle. He led the successful recall campaign against Mayor Frank Edwards who was opposed to the municipal power activities of J. D. Ross, superintendent of city power and light. Ross, recently appointed to the Securities Exchange Commission, was a pallbearer at Zioncheck's funeral.

In 1932 Zioncheck was a spearhead in two victorious forays at the polls. He aided in the election to the Senate of Homer T. Bone, relentless crusader for public ownership, and he himself was sent to the House. In Congress he joined with the progressive bloc. He supported production for use and continually raised his voice against excessive military expenditures. He made an exhaustive analysis of the use of various National Guard units in labor disputes and declared that the people were paying taxes to enable the Guard "to see to it that scabs get in there and break strikes." He supported the New Deal power and labor measures, but he consistently opposed the Administration's gearing up of the war machine.

With the backing of the Washington Commonwealth Federation—probably the most powerful production-for-use organization in the West—Zioncheck was re-elected to Congress in 1934. He at once launched a one-man campaign of Fabian warfare on Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Texas, sponsor of the infamous red rider to the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Zioncheck so thoroughly detested Blanton that he frequently overstepped the limits of good taste in his attacks on the No. 1 red baiter of the House.

Zioncheck had a plentiful supply of moral courage. He was not afraid of the power of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer and frequently attacked Hearst. He scored the attempts to build up a Nazi anti-Semitic movement in his district, and he was one of the first Congressmen to expose the Townsend agitation as an alleged money-making racket. A distressingly large number of pseudo-progressives chimed in with the OARP chorus, hoping thereby to hold the crackpot vote. Zioncheck refused to collaborate in this intellestual chicanery. He said the Townsend snare was ruining the chances of a sane old-age pension program. He put in the first resolution to investigate the Townsend financial set-up.

Honesty And Courage Noted As His Chief Virtues.

POLITICAL COURAGE and intellectual honesty—those were Zioncheck's outstanding virtues. He also had faults. He was arrogant and egotistical. He needlessly antagonized people by discourtesy or downright rudeness. Frequently he was vulgar. Against these shortcomings, he had an attractive personality when he chose to be amiable. Small and wiry, he seemed to have boundless energy. He was one of the few men in the House who tried to read through every bill up for consideration. His collapse was at least partly due to overwork.

Had Zioncheck lived, it is difficult to say whether he would have been re-elected. There is no doubt that many of his active supporters had been alienated by his behavior. But the workers and unemployed still had faith in his integrity, and they might have pulled him through the election. Before his collapse he was considered a possible gubernatorial candidate, and it was considered certain that he would one day be promoted to the United States Senate.

To millions of Americans Marion Zioncheck was a rambunctious young politician running wild. To thousands of his constituents in Seattle he was still the lad who quit school and peddled fish to help a struggling immigrant family survive in the pull-and-haul of the profit system. Just before his body was lowered into the grave at Evergreen Cemetery, the Rev. Fred Shorter, of the Church of the People, said, "Marion was a shell-shocked comrade who died at the barricades fighting to the very last for the poor and dispossessed." Only seconds before he threw himself from his office window, Zioncheck scrawled in incoherent fashion on a piece of Congressional stationery, "My only hope in life was to improve the condition of an unfair economic system. . . ."

Culbertson on Bridge

Another Discovery.

Certain plays that bear the approval stamp of many generations of good bridge players reveal unexpected flaws under the microscope of analysis. Today's hand is a striking example, the more so in that it is a "type" that recurs time and time again.

It remained for Alphonse Moyse, one of my associates, to discover that all of us have failed always to capitalize on the opportunity presented in such a hand as this:

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

NORTH
♥ A K 4
♣ 7 5 4

WEST
♠ A 8 7
♥ 7 3 2
♦ J 9 8 6 4

EAST
♠ K 9
♥ J 10 9 8
♦ 10 2
♣ K Q 10 9 6

SOUTH
♠ J 4 3
♣ A J 2

South's two notrump bid was a slight stretch, but he properly considered it necessary to indicate the club stoppers at an early stage.

West opened the eight of clubs, East played the queen, and South correctly ducked. This play by South (which is not the one evoking my enthusiasm) put the hand on ice for the declarer, since no return of East's could have defeated the contract. On the actual return of the ten of clubs South won with the jack and led a spade. Now, it would not matter who won the trick. If West should win it he would have no club left to clear East's suit, and if East should win he would have no other entry. Thus, the defenders inevitably were held to three tricks: once club and two spades.

Now for Mr. Moyse' discovery!

He points out that since East can be quite sure on the bidding that South holds two club stoppers, and since East himself has only one possible outside entry, the correct play to the first lead is not the queen (which every bridge player under the sun, to the best of my belief, would play) but the nine.

Consider what a difference this would make. Declarer would have to accept his jack on the spot or resign himself to one club trick. With declarer winning the first trick, reasonably good defense would make the contract impossible of accomplishment. South can count only eight tricks without touching spades and must, therefore, play for at least one spade trick. When he leads a spade, however, West merely jumps up with the ace and leads his remaining club. In this way East's vital spade entry is preserved for the cashing of his long clubs.

Reduced to black and white, the play is simplicity itself but, as I have said, I seriously doubt that it ever has been used before.

Write your bridge troubles and problems to Ely Culbertson, care of this paper, inclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

On the Air Today

Doing a grand job in "Town Hall Tonight" has had its reward for Stoopnagle and Budd. Naturally it is the more appreciated by these purveyors of nonsense because Fred Allen returns to his own show in the due course of time and the good thing now serving the Buffalo comics comes to an end.

Beginning October 4—just four days after their last show for the "Town Hall"—the boys turn their talents to a Sunday afternoon series, for the NBC Blue net, at 5:30.

Stoop and Budd have consistently been in-and-outers, first with a grand show, but no sponsor; then a sponsor, but no bell-ringing act. I have always felt their best work was done when they were merely doing sustaining shows for Columbia.

The jink seems broken. "Town Hall Tonight" seems to have been exactly the type of spot for them. I have no idea how closely Allen's scripts and comedy devices are censored by his sponser. But apparently a great deal of leeway is provided—and that is definitely what Stoop and Budd require.

There is a classic story of the script situation Stoop and Budd once developed, based on roller skates. Their sponsor happened to be an auto manufacturer and word came back that roller skates were a form of transportation apt to take the listener's mind off automobiles. Hence—the situation was out!

That, in case you have never thought of it, is enough to discourage any pair of comedians. However, back they always have come, poking fun at the fact they have no advertiser to pay their weekly salaries. No better line ever was invented than their's: "Watch the Sponsors Go By" when they have had long lapses as sustaining artists.

No word has been released as yet as to the nature of their new winter show.

N. B. C. is said to be having trouble approving the "Good Will Court" idea despite the fact that the show is to be presented over an N. B. C. net in the period used by Bowes for so long. It is said that N. B. C. has prepared a list of "13 don'ts" for the guidance of A. L. Alexander, who has run the show over the Intercity net for many months and will continue to produce it at Radio City. For example: The unwed mother won't get a chance at the microphone as she has in the past at WMCA and the Intercity net. N. B. C. has eliminated sex and religion.

Scottish Chieftain to Wed Mrs. F. C. Hicks Today

Washington and Long Island Social Leader to Become Bride of Robert Lister Macneil in Picturesque Ceremony Here.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

A picturesque ceremony will take place at noon today when The Macneil of Barra, forty-fifth chief of the Clan Macneil, of Scotland, and Mrs. Frederick C. Hicks are married at the latter's Washington home, 2211 Thirtieth street. The bridegroom is Mr. Robert Lister Macneil, of New York, who lived in Washington before the World War.

Mrs. Hicks' home will be decorated in fall flowers of blue, green, yellow and white—the colors of the Macneil plaid—from the Montgomery County, Md., gardens of Mrs. Hicks' aunt, Mrs. Philip Dandridge Laird. Another Scotch note will be introduced by Merdo and Donald Buchanan, pipers from the Isle of Barra, who will wear the Macneil plaids and play the Highland wedding march and other native airs.

In the wedding party will be the bride's son, Mr. Frederick Stevens Hicks, a student at Kent School, Conn., who will be best man for Mr. Macneil; the latter's young daughters and son, Kathleen, Joan and Ian, and the step-grandchildren of the bride, Elizabeth Dean Kelly and Georgina Kelly, daughters of Capt. Paul B. Kelly, U. S. A., and Mrs. Kelly, the latter formerly Miss Georgina Hicks, stepdaughter of Mrs. Hicks.

Cousin to Escort Her.

The bride will be escorted by her cousin, former Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland. The marriage service will be read by Canon Albert H. Lucas, of the Washington Cathedral, and the Rev. Stuart Neill, of Hartford, Conn., chaplain of the Clan Macneil Association, of which Mr. Macneil is honorary president. Captain and Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Laird also will be present.

The bride will wear a dress of old blue crepe, made with a long skirt and plaited cape. Her wide-brimmed hat of bluish purple straw will be trimmed with a narrow band of velvet about the crown, held in place in front by a cluster of blue, purple and orchid flowers. She will wear a corsage of orchids and a diamond chain with a diamond pendant watch, and will carry a purple prayer book.

Kathleen and Joan Macneil will wear flowered silk dresses smocked in colors, and velvet turbans. Elizabeth and Georgina Kelly will wear white silk dresses smocked in yellow. Young Ian Macneil will wear a white sailor suit. The little girls will carry old-fashioned bouquets of flowers in the Macneil colors.

A wedding breakfast will be served after the ceremony.

To Leave Capital Today.

The couple will leave this afternoon to sail soon for Scotland. On their return they will go to Shorewood, Mrs. Hicks' Long Island estate. Later they will spend some time at Barra House, Marlboro, Vt., an old farmhouse remodeled by Mr. Macneil. They will come to Washington for part of the winter.

As Miss Marie Christy Stevens, daughter of the late Maj. Pierre Christy Stevens, U. S. A., and Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Hicks spent much of her young womanhood in Washington. She was a volunteer worker during the World War, serving at Evergreen, the Garrett estate in Baltimore, where blind veterans were cared for. She is the niece of the late Rear Admiral Thomas Holdup Stevens 3d; the granddaughter of the late Rear Admiral Thomas H. Stevens and the great-granddaughter of Commodore Thomas Holdup Stevens, a hero of the War of 1812, who was in command of the Washington Navy Yard at the time of his death.

Her marriage to the late Mr. Hicks, former Representative from New York and later alien property custodian, took place in Bethlehem Chapel, Washington Cathedral, in 1920. After his death she spent her winters in Washington and her summers in Shorewood.

His Clan Ancient.

Mr. Macneil's clan has figured in Scotch history for hundreds of years. Kishmul Castle, on the Isle of Barra, the half-ruined stronghold of the clan, passed out of the family possession 98 years ago, but it is the ambition of the present chieftain to restore it.

He is the son of the late Roderick Ambrose Macneil and the former Miss Elizabeth Dixon Binns, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dixon Binns. He studied architecture at the Beaux Arts School in Paris and before the World War was architect of the Cuban Embassy here. When Great Britain declared war he joined the Canadian forces and went overseas.

On his return to this country he established offices in New York.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Should Girl Make First Move to Heal Breach With Beau, Who Pouts Over Declined Invitation.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For the past year I have been going out with a boy to whom I am greatly attached. He has a good position, makes a very good salary and is very saving. On many occasions he has told me that he loved me and would give anything if he were financially able to marry, for which he says he is now saving his money. Numbers of persons have told me that I am the only girl he ever went with regularly.

• • • •

This boy became very angry with me one night because I declined an invitation to go out with him and a few others on a social outing. I had several good reasons for not going, which I can not make him believe. He still thinks I should have gone. This was along the latter part of the week. He had a date with me the following Sunday night which he broke. I was told by someone who visited his next-door neighbor that Sunday that he stayed at home all day and pouted. He has not been back to see me for about two months. Do you think he should have become so offended at such a small matter?

• • • •

I might tell you that he has been to my home several times since, supposedly to see my brothers. Do you believe he came to see my brothers, or hoped perhaps to see me? I have seen him during this time and he always seems very happy to see me. His own sister said he talked a lot about coming to see me, but he never does any more. He has several large photographs of me which he refuses to return.

• • • •

I want him to come back. I am willing to do anything in the world that I feel is my duty to win him back. From what I hear and from what I have observed, it is evident that he wants to come back, but that he is expecting me to ask him to do so. Is it my duty to do this? He is a somewhat independent person and for that reason I am in doubt as to what to do. After all, was it my fault? If I must ask him back, just how should I proceed?

PERPLEXED.

Folly of Stubborness.

DEAR PERPLEXED: Certainly you committed no unforgivable sin in declining an invitation to go out if you preferred to stay at home. Your reasons for declining, if graciously and regretfully stated, should have been accepted in like spirit by your beau. As I see it, he was wrong both in losing his temper and in questioning the validity of your excuses. However, if you are eager to heal the breach, and if you are convinced he is too stubborn to come the whole way by admitting his fault, you might as well make the necessary overtures and get it over with. After all, he may think he has made the first move toward reconciliation by calling at your home several times since, by making no secret of his pleasure at seeing you, and by insisting on keeping your pictures.

• • • •

Now, if the incident is to be closed and forgotten, the sooner you act to that end, the better. If you think there is any likelihood the boy will be coming to your home in the near future to see your brothers, you might wait until then to fire the opening gun. If you are not sure when he may cross your path again, telephone him and say you would like to talk with him at his earliest convenience. He will know, of course, what you wish to talk about, and if he really does wish to resume his courtship of you, he will come. If he gets cagey and quarrelsome over the telephone, bring the conversation to a speedy close on a friendly note and try to forget him.

• • • •

I do not advise you to write him, since anything you put on paper may be used as ammunition against you, if he happens to lack an honorable sense of reticence and fair play. Also, there is the possibility he may have been looking for an opportunity to break up your friendship, feeling that you were taking his attention too seriously, or that he had committed himself to something he didn't wish to see through. And in that case I feel sure you wouldn't care to go on indelible record as running after him after he had thrown you down.

• • • •

If and when a discussion of the incident arises, don't try to put him in the wrong; but on the other hand don't permit him to place all the blame on you. If both are willing to put the whole thing down to "misunderstanding," without going into the details of who was wrong and who was right, there is a chance of your mutual devotion surviving. But if attempts at reconciliation bring on another quarrel, with the boy taking the aggressive in blaming you, then there is no hope.

• • • •

If the boy really cares for you, he must have suffered a great deal during the past two months, even as you have suffered and out of that suffering he may have learned a valuable lesson concerning the necessity of give and take in courtship. Sometimes a painful period of estrangement between lovers opens their eyes to the folly of making mountainous issues out of molehills—which, as I see it, is what your beau has done.

M. H.

How to Spend Leisure.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I live in the suburbs, 20 minutes from downtown Washington, and my husband works at night. My work is finished by 6 o'clock in the evening and I would like to have some suggestions as to what to do with my time. I read a lot, but have to take care of my eyes, as they are not very strong. Thanking you, I am,

H. M. T.

DEAR H. M. T.: Knowing absolutely nothing about your intellectual or material resources, it is difficult for me to make worthwhile suggestions as to what you might do with your leisure time. Poor eyesight is a very considerable handicap, putting handiwork or study out of the question. If you have a patch of ground to call your own, you might become a gardener during the hours from 6 until nightfall, working a flower garden, a rock garden or a vegetable garden. During the winter months, you might fuss with a window box sort of garden indoors.

You might acquire a menagerie of pets—a dog, a cat, some birds, which would require a certain amount of looking after during your spare time. Or you might work up a little trade of spending evenings with children whose parents want a regular night out each week. This would occupy your evenings and give you a little extra money to boot, the price for such service ranging from 75 cents an evening upward. I understand.

M. H.

Inquire at Headquarters.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Will you give me the address of the Federal Housing Administration? Is it true that this agency will lend anyone anywhere money to buy a home, and that you can pay just as though paying rent? Just where can I find out all about this?

A READER.

DEAR READER: The Federal Housing Administration is located at Vermont avenue and K street northwest. The telephone is National 5061. I suggest that you direct your queries to the agency itself, or to the United States Information Service at 1423 F street northwest.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Dubonnet—Fashion Color Queen for Fall

Distinctive in color and styling, is the two-piece knitted Dubonnet frock below. The unique ribbed weaving on the blouse, slanting pockets finished with slide fasteners, narrow leather belt and twin bracelets of Dubonnet catalin, are outstanding features.

A lovely evening ensemble (above), fashioned of Dubonnet satin shot with metal; jacket luxuriously trimmed with fox collar and pockets. The two rhinestone and prystal hair clips, echoed in the matching twin bracelets, are important evening accessories for fall.

Rich Vintage Tones Soften Fall Fashions

Dubonnet, Started as Fad, Becomes Staple of Color Chart.

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

DUBONNET, a vivid variant of the royal purple, suggested by the product of the grape, is one of the most attractive and flattering of all the popular wine shades this season. This very wearable color, which first dazzled the world of fashion two years ago, reappears this fall in a tone that is a bit deeper than formerly—it has been aptly described as the color of wine at the bottom of the glass or bottle. This alluring wine shade has become so universally popular that a fashion show was held this week in New York with an array of costumes from daylight to dawn, all interpreted in Dubonnet.

Rich "vintage" tones are significant in advance fall fashions, both in Paris and New York; as ensemble themes and as an accessory accent. Dubonnet, started out as a novelty, but has become a staple in the style color chart. It has a glowing warmth and softness which is not only kind to the complexion, but adapts itself with amazing versatility to blondes, brunettes and titian-haired alike. The older woman with gray or snow-white hair may also wear this striking wine shade with the utmost confidence.

Besides following the vogue for deep, restrained tones rather than those which are flamboyant, Dubonnet has practically the same quality as black for giving an illusion of slimness to the figure. Unlike many other tints and hues, it is as alluring interpreted in soft woolens and knits, as it is in elegant velvets and silks. Dubonnet is also appearing this season in every phase of the wardrobe—lovely evening ensembles, daytime costumes of silk or woll, knitted spectator sports outfits, negligees and hostess gowns.

This popular vintage tone is one of the smartest in the entire range of accepted colors, to use as a basis for chic and unusual color contrasts. The same thing is true of Dubonnet when used as a costume accent. For instance, Dubonnet with the various wine shades, starting from a tint that is almost a pastel, down through the tones to a deep, deep wine that is almost black, has endless possibilities. A Dubonnet frock topped with a gray fur coat or one of velvet in rich plum color is the epitome of swank; combined with medium blues, it is a fascinating ensemble theme for women of all ages.

For evening, one can go quite dramatic. Pale wine, sheer gowns of the dinner type with short sequin jackets of Dubonnet; printed metals combined with vintage tones; silver fox or kolinsky used lavishly with Dubonnet in velvet, satin and rich silks. Sweater outfits of Dubonnet with gray, blue or even brown will be much in evidence ere the season advances; or, any of these colors, with Dubonnet accessories, will be a fashion-right as they are distinctive and attractive.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Sept. 4.

DICK BARTHELMESS began it when he married his present wife, and the handsome young bucks of the movies are now snooting the Hollywood cuties right and left in favor of local glamour girls. Gary Cooper, having been socially discovered and smartened up by the Countess Dorothy di Frasso, married our Veronica Balfe — called "Nocky" by her friends. A few weeks ago Gary's best pal, Randolph Scott, took a DuPont to wife, which makes it real clubby for botn boys, who began their film careers as cow punchers and now wear tails and white ties like old Fifth avenue cliff dwellers.

FRANCES BROKAW.

And now darned if Henry Fonda, late of Omaha, Nebr., and now of Hollywood, doesn't get engaged to the beauteous Frances Seymour Brokaw, widow of the local lawyer-sportsman. The bride-to-be comes from a line of old New York blue-veins that includes Pells and Stuyvesants, as well as some Philadelphia Biddles!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A mounted courier gallops up to my desk with the thrilling news that the Presidential candidates of both major parties smoke the same brand of pipe tobacco—a mixture flavored with rum and honey. A fancy Madison avenue smoke shop mixes it fresh daily and ships it all over the country.

• • • •

Local constables have again caught up with 8-year-old Mario Bucci, our hamlet's champion runaway at all weights and ages. Marie was nabbed at Coney Island in the midst of her thirteenth successful runaway in four years. When young Bucci goes on a tea, she heads immediately for an amusement park, which indicates that she will wind up as a snake charmer or a hula dancer.

Grace Moore, the Tennessee lark, told me as she stepped off her vacation boat the other day that she is concocting a cook book to be known as "A Prima Donna's Holiday." No doubt it will contain some very toothsome recipes, but what I'd really like to know is how a pretty singer gets so rich and famous with such limited vocal equipment.

Guidance Hints Offered Girls Entering College

Miss Vinnie Barrows, of George Washington University Staff, and Frances Walsky, of Pan-Hellenic, Give Views on Sorority Life on Campus.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

YOUNG WOMAN, are your eyes on college these days? Are you thinking about the courses you'll take, the instructors you'll have, what sorority you'll make and how you'll rate on the campus both with classmates and with faculty?

If so, Mrs. Vinnie G. Barrows, director of women's personnel guidance at George Washington University, has these suggestions for you.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Budget your time from the minute your classes begin, so you will have enough time for study, for play, for talking, for reading and so on. Otherwise, you'll find yourself hopelessly behind in your work.

Remember you are on your own responsibility as you have never been before

Be grown-up in your attitude toward your work;

Remember your life for the next four years will be largely what you make it;

Don't try to look, talk or act older than you are;

Don't waste time trying to find out what courses and instructors are easy;

Remember that college cannot be all play and should not be all work;

Be friendly but not forward with new acquaintances, and show that you are interested in other students;

Keep in mind that contacts you make in college can help or hinder you for many years to come.

Student of Students.

Mrs. Barrows voiced these hints at her desk yesterday between interviews with prospective freshmen, many of whom already know whether they're going in for study or social life when they enter college this fall. After talking a few minutes with a girl, Mrs. Barrows can usually tell what type of campus figure she will be—the student "whose chief concern is her grades;" or the social butterfly "who comes for the purpose of making a certain sorority;" or the all-around student "who goes in for good grades, sorority life and all sorts of other college activities;" or the misfit who can never adjust herself to college life and usually drops out before the end of the first semester.

"The ideal, of course, is the all-around student, but this type comprises only about 1 per cent of any group," said Mrs. Barrows. "The girl bent on having a good time and barely getting by in her studies is a familiar campus figure, and so is the student who spends all her time poring over her books."

Mrs. Barrows further pointed out that many freshmen feel their entire college career is blighted unless they are given a bid to a sorority, and the right sorority at that.

"They lose sight of the fact that only 10 per cent of our girls are in sororities, and they have the wrong conception of college if they feel that being in a sorority is basic to everything else. Furthermore, the girl who isn't pledged at first has a chance to be taken in later on—if she makes a name for herself as a student or as an outstanding member of other college organizations."

Reform Suggested.

If Mrs. Barrows had her way about it there would be no sorority pledging until students had completed 30 hours of work. "Such a system would give a freshman a chance to know college life other than in its relation to sororities and would, I think, establish a balance in a girl's college career."

Miss Frances Walsky, president of the Pan-Hellenic Association at George Washington University, stressed that in two weeks of rushing, sororities often overlook good material.

"The end of rush season does not, however, mark one's last chance to make a sorority; some girls who don't attract any attention at first blossom out into campus queens later on and get bids from many sororities." Other helpful hints given by Miss Walsky follow:

Don't over-dress for social functions during rush week;

And don't try to act sophisticated or supercilious;

Be gracious to the girls you meet, but don't make a special effort to impress them;

Don't be "too anxious" to join any sorority.

And remember that poise, tact, good manners, alertness and a keen interest in others count for much more than a smart wardrobe.

"And another thing to remember is that the end of rush season doesn't mark a girl's last chance to make a sorority," said Miss Walsky.

Sorority Defended.

A smartly dressed, bright-eyed girl over at the registrar's office admitted she was looking forward to entering college this fall, but she also admitted, "If I don't make the sorority I want, I'll quit after rush season! Why? Well, because the sorority girls help you over all the rough places those first few months. They give you a feeling of security of being in a group of loyal friends. They introduce you to men and help you get started; and they simply make you pass your work."

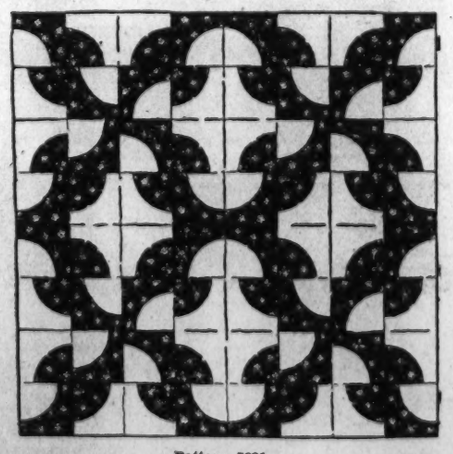
'Wonder of the World' Quilt Made on Only Two Patterns



Pattern 5621.

By Alice Brooks.

RIGHTLY NAMED "Wonder of the World"—this gay quilt is in keeping with its title—it's made of but two pattern pieces and two contrasting fabrics! Lovely, indeed—is this unusual pattern when completed; it looks so intricate but is so easy. A charming modern "heirloom," you'll be surprised how quickly the blocks pile up. In pattern 5621 you will find the Block Chart, an illustration for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with yardage chart, diagram of quilt to help arrange the blocks for single and double bed size, and a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Dept., 259 W 14th Street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

"WASHINGTON'S HOME NEWSPAPER"

Piquant Mexican Dishes Delight Autumn Appetite

Tamale Pie and Sopa de Arroz Suggested for Washington Housewife—Their Ingredients Are Readily Obtained in Capital.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE WASHINGTON HOUSEWIFE awake to new dishes, alert for methods to vary her menus, and untiring in her quest for foods of "different" appetite appeal has found in the dishes of her Mexican neighbors a charm that brings all the romance and glamour of another world to her table. This month when cooler weather calls for a sudden change on the character of meals, Mexican dishes will add a peppery flavor and piquant quality that the newly-sharpened appetite will find especially inviting.

It is a real pleasure to find in the heart of Washington a little bit of Spain—a tiny store where all the ingredients for dishes with a Spanish, Mexican or South American flagor may be purchased. Here you will find the real tamaline or corn meal flour that is used in the preparation of the tortillas, tamales and enchiladas.

Bottles of red and green tabasco pepper, peeled tomatoes in cans and hot pickled peppers wait to be purchased for the delicious sauces that accompany favorite Mexican dishes. There are already prepared sauces, too—mole en polvo which can be mixed with chicken, meat or vegetables, and salsa ranchera, a hot sauce for rice, meat or chicken.

Saffron on Sale.

Real Spanish saffron used as a flavoring and coloring for arroz con pollo—chicken with rice—can be found on the shelves with other favorite Spanish herbs.

Then to carry out your meal in true Mexican or Spanish style you may serve mate, a tea-like beverage imported from South America, a sauce called mofongo con chicharron, which comes already prepared and is made from the plantanos—a very fat and overlong banana—and something like our American cracklings, or baked fresh plantanos served in the skins, or mangos in sirup.

The following recipes are favorite Mexican dishes. They are also popular in Washington because they contain no ingredients that are difficult to obtain.

Tamale Pie.

8 tamales, canned tamales may be used
1 cup tomato pulp
1 small can corn
1 cup ripe olives, cut in pieces
½ cup chili sauce
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 cup grated cheese
2 cups cooked chicken, cut in large pieces
Salt

Line baking dish with tamales; mix together ingredients with chicken and pour into dish; cover with grated cheese. If sauce seems dry, add liquor from cooked chicken. Bake one hour in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit.)

Sopa de Arroz.

Wash two cups of rice (Mexicans dry it in the sun) or use rice in cartons. Brown in iron skillet in hot fat about one tablespoon, stirring constantly. When brown add 1 chopped onion and a large tomato chopped, or canned tomato. Pour over enough meat stock (chicken, beef, or pork) to cover and add salt to taste. Place over fire and let simmer until grains swell and separate. If necessary add a little more stcok. Do not stir, but loosen rice with fork to allow steam to escape. Meat cut in small pieces makes a nice addition.

Orange Dulce.
(Orange Sweet.)

With a sharp knife shave the yellow outside peel from oranges. Cut out core and remove all seeds. Let oranges stand in water several hours, then change water and let stand all night. Then add sugar as for preserves and cook until oranges are transparent and can be easily pierced. Remove oranges and boil sirup long enough to thicken. Cut oranges in half and serve either with sirup or whipped cream.

A thin tomato sauce seasoned to taste with chili powder is frequently served over egg omelet. The same sauce may be used as the liquid in which eggs are poached. Both dishes are favorites in Mexico and may easily be served by the Washington housewife because the ingredients are from among the usual supply found on any pantry shelf or in any refrigerator. A recipe for the sauce follows:

Thin Tomato Sauce.

1 quart fresh or canned tomatoes
1 slice onion
8 cloves
3 tablespoons fat
3 tablespoons flour
Salt and pepper

Set the tomatoes and cloves on the fire and cook for 20 minutes.

Brown the fat in the frying pan, add the flour and cook until smooth and brown, stirring constantly. Add the tomatoes, cook for three minutes, season with salt and pepper and pass through a strainer fine enough to hold back the seeds. This makes a very thin sauce. Season to taste with chili powder. Serve over omelet or heat in shallow pan, and when it comes to a boil drop in eggs to poach. Serve eggs in nests of steamed rice topped with the remaining sauce.

Apple Dishes Theme of Post Prize Contest

APPLE dishes will be popular during September because it is just recently that cooking apples have made their fall debut in the local markets. For this reason apple recipes have been chosen as the theme of The Post recipe contest for next week.

Every Post food page reader is invited to enter her favorite recipe for apples. Anything from apple jelly to apple dumplings will be considered eligible to win one of the cash awards that will be offered the five best recipes submitted. The first prize is $5, the second $3, and the three remaining prizes $1 each.

Neatness has never been stressed before as a factor in judging the recipes for the awards, but in some of the recent contests many recipes have been so poorly written as to be almost unreadable. In any of the future contests recipes that are not typed or written neatly in ink will not be considered for an award.

Send your apple recipes to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post. Be sure to mail your recipes in time to reach this office not later than next Saturday morning.

Beans Bound Into Sheaf Novel Salad Treatment

Girdled with a band of Bermuda onion, this string bean salad is unusual in arrangement and will appeal to the eye. Palate appeal is also taken care of by the novel manner in which the mayonnaise dressing has been treated. See accompanying story for the complete recipe.

String Beans in Band of Onion Tempting Sunday Night Salad

Sandwiches and Salad, Supplemented With Hot Soup, Is Ideal Menu for Light Supper When Evenings Are Chilly.

SUNDAY NIGHT SUPPERS will assume a more important role once week-end trips have ceased and late vacationers have returned to the city. During the summer the third meal on Sunday was often eliminated altogether or limited to a cold snack each person found for himself in the refrigerator.

Now that September is here, and the family is returning to a more settled Sunday routine, the third meal of the day must be a real supper. This does not mean, however, that Sunday supper must be an elaborate meal or one that is difficult to prepare.

Many women find that sandwiches and salad supplemented by a hot soup if the evening is chilly is an ideal type of meal for fall Sunday evenings. The sandwiches may be prepared from thin slices of meat cut from the roast which was served for dinner. The soup may be canned, and the salad may be prepared from fresh or cooked vegetables or fruits chilling in the refrigerator.

Unusual arrangement of fruits or vegetables against a background of crisp greens and a piquant dressing will go a long way in transforming simple ingredients into tempting salads. You will find that even a few cold string beans can be arranged to form an attractive salad if unusual arrangement and a good dressing are provided. The following recipe gives the preparation for the salad pictured above:

String Bean Salad.

2 cups cooked or canned stringless beans
3 scallions, sliced
3 radishes, sliced
1 pimiento
French dressing
1 cup oil mayonnaise

Marinate string beans with French dressing. Chill. When ready to serve, drain. Arrange on individual salad plates on crisp salad green a sheaf of stringless beans and bind into sheaves with a band of Bermuda onion and pimiento strips. Fold sliced scallions and radishes into mayonnaise of smooth, creamy texture. Serve on side of salad plate in crisp lettuce cup. Serves 6 to 8.

Broadcloths Rich.

New York, (AP).—Broadcloths are here in great number—rich satiny-finished wools reminiscent of the days when white gloved fashionables rode up Fifth Avenue in their victorias to "pay calls." There are also a number of supple duvetyns, both black and colored, and fine cashmeres of chiffon-like tissue.

5,000,000 Sought By Peace Mandate

A drive to obtain signatures of 5,000,000 Americans before December 1 in support of the Peoples' Mandate to Governments to End War will be started Sunday. That is the birthday of Jane Addams, great humanitarian and foe of war.

The mandate with its signatures will be presented to the Inter-American Peace Conference which will meet in December in Buenos Aires. A million signatures already have been obtained in this country, and 10,000,000 in Europe. The goal of the mandate committee is 50,000,000 signatures throughout the world.

YES, THIS FOOD ENDS YOUR CONSTIPATION

Look out for those half-sick days, when you feel listless, headachy, out-of-sorts. Your trouble may be constipation. The real cause of common constipation is too little "bulk" in meals. Your system misses its regular exercise.

Get this needed "bulk" in a delicious cereal: Kellogg's ALL-BRAN. Within the body, its "bulk" absorbs moisture, forms a soft mass, gently sponges out the system.

Why keep on feeling bad when you can feel good? Millions of people use ALL-BRAN. Tests prove it's safe and effective. ALL-BRAN is guaranteed. Try it a week. If not satisfactory, your money will be refunded by the Kellogg Company.

Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. Serve as a cereal, with milk or cream, or cook into recipes. Remember, ALL-BRAN also supplies vitamin B and iron.

Certainly you'd rather eat a food than take pills and drugs. Buy ALL-BRAN at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Grapes High On Home List For Canning

Recipes Are Developed for Concords, Now Ready for Preserving.

REQUESTS from Post food page readers for grape recipes this week have reminded the food page editor that the grapes in hundreds of Washington backyards are ripe and ready for preserving.

Jams, jellies, conserves, relishes and chutney prepared from the purple grape, sugar and spices are the pride of many a pantry shelf. Many meals next winter will be enhanced by the delightful color and flavor of the purple or Concord grape. The recipes that follow are all popular ones, and they have been developed especially for the Concord grape, for this is the variety most common to backyard cultivation.

Grape Juice.

Wash and pick grapes from stems and place over a slow fire until the juice runs freely. Strain through fine cloth or jelly bag, pressing out all the juice. Measure, and to each quart of juice use 1½ cups sugar. Scald the juice, add the sugar, boil 5 minutes after all the sugar is melted; bottle in clean, hot jars and seal.

Sweet Grape Pickle.

10 pounds stemmed, large ripe grapes.
6 pounds sugar
1 tablespoon ground cloves
1 quart vinegar
1 tablespoon ground cinnamon

Wash, stem and drain the grapes. Place in clean jars. Boil sugar, vinegar and spices and pour over grapes while boiling hot. Seal at once.

Spiced Grape Butter.

10 cups grapes
8 cups brown sugar
1 cup cider vinegar
2 tablespoons ground cloves
2 tablespoons ground cinnamon

Wash the grapes, remove stems, separate the pulp from the skins and let stand overnight. Heat pulp to boiling point and strain through a colander. Add skins to pulp. Then add sugar and spices. Boil 1 hour and then add vinegar. Cook until thick, stirring constantly. Seal in hot jars.

* X WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1936 13

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Samuel Lubell.

H. O. L. C. Set-up.

President Roosevelt's suggestion that civil service principles be extended as far as possible to the HOLC is not likely to result in a drastic reorganization of that agency.

Legislation will be required to give the agency a civil service status, pending the enactment of such legislation the most that can be done is to harmonize HOLC administration with usual civil service procedure. Officials of the agency say that a great deal has already been accomplished in this respect and the changes to be effected because of the President's letter will be solely in the "degree of co-operation."

Conferences between commission and HOLC officials have already been set and the probable points of discussion will be appointments from civil service registers, classification of positions, examinations for eligible lists and a system of rating.

Since the HOLC is no longer hiring large numbers of new employes—the peak personnel of 19,000 has been reduced to about 15,000 with roughly 2,000 of these in Washington, the question of whether or not new vacancies are to be filled from the civil service register is relatively insignificant, officials point out.

There is a difference in numeral designation between the HOLC and civil service system of classifications that would have to be straightened out. Of greater importance is the salary question. Under the terms of the executive order maximum HOLC salaries are fixed to correspond to the minimum salaries of the civil service grades. Any change would be to the eventual, if not immediate, advantage of employes.

Efficiency ratings are already being used in some HOLC bureaus, we were told, and the agency plans to extend the system as the methods are tested. Thus far the agency is following the regular civil service rating system but, we were told, administrators have several ideas about rating which they may put into effect if they are dissatisfied with the results of the traditional system.

At that it wouldn't be a bad idea if the HOLC were to try out several different methods of making efficiency ratings simultaneously. With so much criticism being levelled at the rating system, a little experimentation now might result in improvements that could be applied throughout the Government service.

Blood Transfusion.

Working for the Government may be a prosaic sort of existence but every now and then the opportunity pops up for a bit of personal heroism on the part of some public servant.

The other day C. L. Turnbull, one of the guards at the Treasury Procurement Division, and who has been in Emergency Hospital for more than a week, was reported to be in a critical condition. A blood transfusion was necessary but Turnbull didn't have the money.

Capt. Hoagland, who is in charge of all the Treasury guards, was told about Turnbull's plight. Immediately he broadcast a call to all the Treasury guards and in a short time ten of Turnbull's fellow-workers were at the hospital offering their blood. Not certain that the blood of any of these men would prove suitable, Hoagland told the hospital doctors he would pay for the transfusion if necessary.

The blood of one of the guards, A. E. Ward, also in the procurement building, did match and the transfusion was made. Last reports had Turnbull "slightly improved," but still in critical condition.

Ships.

"Sailing Ships" is the topic of tomorrow's radio broadcast produced jointly by the Office of Education and the Smithsonian Institution. If you intend to listen—and Smithsonian-Education broadcasts are worth listening to—we would advise you to spend a half hour today inspecting the Smithsonian's sailing ship collection.

You will see rafts and dugout canoes, Egyptian galleys and models of the sailing vessels used by William the Conqueror in crossing from Normandy to England and by Columbus in discovering America. There are also Yankee Clippers, Cape Cod fishing schooners, whaling boats, pirate vessels and lest we forget, a model of the Mayflower. As you read the description of this 90-foot vessel you may wonder how so many people could have come across in it.

McDonald will present six resolutions for the convention's approval, a shortening of the 44-hour working week for guards, automatic promotion, optional 30-year retirement, equalization of salaries of guards working under the National Park Service with guards employed under wage boards, and cash payment of salaries for employes receiving less than $2,000.

D.C. Traffic For Holiday At New Peak

Railroads, Planes and Buses Report Heavy Reservations.

Thousands Leave City, Other Thousands Pay It Visit.

The combination of a double holiday and the weather man's forecast of a fair, mild week-end is inspiring the heaviest traffic the Capital has ever had over Labor Day, automobile clubs and transportation officials said yesterday.

By railroad, bus, airplane and private automobile the annual exodus from Washington for the final summer holiday began yesterday. Thousands of persons will leave the city today and still others have made reservations for early tomorrow.

Most of the Capital's inhabitants seem to be rushing toward the beaches for one last swim and sun bath, to distant and strange cities for sightseeing and to points all over the country for visits with the folks back home.

Visitors Flock Here.

Washington, however, will gain as many as it loses over the week-end. Every road, every train, plane and bus is bringing visitors. The tourist camp and hotels were filling rapidly last night. By tonight the Labor Day rush will be in full swing.

Today, tomorrow and Monday the Washington Monument, the Capitol, and other tourist meccas will do a rushing business. Although there is no parade or other celebration of the holiday scheduled, visitors are expected in greater numbers than ever before at this time of the year.

While many Washington residents are heading for nearby resorts, a large number are traveling many miles from home. These are, for the most part, Government employes who have arranged to be away from their desks today and who will not have to report to work until Tuesday morning.

Extra Planes Planned.

Eastern Airlines expects to have to put on extra ships today to take care of traffic demands. While the bulk of the passengers are going Northward, reservations for the South, especially for Florida where big game fishing is at its height, are unusually heavy.

American Airlines said all indications point toward greater travel over Labor Day than over the record-breaking Fourth of July this year. A surprisingly large number of reservations have been made for Sunday and every plane which left the city yesterday was filled to capacity.

All the railroads which serve the Capital said they have been carrying extra heavy loads since late Thursday and by yesterday noon they had to add sections to almost every train. Travel by rail is expected to reach a new high today, the beginning of one of the first "long week-ends" since the new low rates went into effect.

Bus Lines Taxed.

Bus lines also reported capacity loads, with traffic coming into Washington as heavy as that going out. Extra buses will be added at noon today.

Pennsylvania Airlines had a spurt in business yesterday, but the peak is expected to come today. The Keystone Automobile Club and the American Automobile Association are convinced from the number of inquiries they have received that motor traffic will exceed all previous Labor Day holidays, beginning this noon.

But while thousands of persons are leaving Washington and other thousands of visitors are coming in, a great many families plan to spend the week-end at their homes here. Some of them have decided they'll be more comfortable that way. Others are staying home because some member of the family must work.

Family to Remain.

"Holiday or no holiday, my husband has to be on the job," said Mrs. Burton Hood, 111 R street northeast, yesterday. "So the boys and I will stay home with him." She nodded toward her two sons, Burton, 9, and Albert, 5. Hood is a street car conductor.

"We're going to stay right here in town, I guess," Mrs. A. Bosman, wife of a Treasury Department employe, said. "We might go to the Zoo or to a movie, but we're not going to a beach or anything like that. If we go anywhere I want it to be Baltimore so I can visit with a cousin."

The Brosmans, who live at 1837 California street, have two daughters, Esther, 9, and Rose 11. Both girls said they'd be satisfied with a picnic in Rock Creek Park and a visit to the Zoo.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Donoghue, of 3524 Park place northwest, said they guessed they'd spend the holiday at home, too. Eight-year-old John and 6-year-old Edward smiled in agreement. The plan suited them. But two other sons, Danny, 9, and Pat, 4 were in a traveling mood. They spent yesterday afternoon shining up the Donoghue car in hopes the family would decide to go "somewheres."

Browns to Stay Home.

The James A. Browns, of 4845 Kansas avenue northwest, are also going to spend Labor Day here.

"We haven't planned anything special," said Mrs. Brown yesterday. "Jimmy—that's my 14-year-old son, says he's going to the ball game. I don't know what the rest of us will do."

The Browns also have a daughter, Virginia. The father is a salesman for a coal company.

And so it goes. Thousands of families are leaving town, other thousands are coming on visits, and still other thousands will stay at home. For all of them the weather man has promised clear skies with a slight rise in temperature.

Death Waits at the Corners for the Careless and Reckless

Second Victim Of Auto Crash Dies in Virginia

Mrs. Etta Knapp Succumbs to Injuries; Youth, 15, in Grave Condition.

An accident which ended the vacation of Mr. and Mrs. John Knapp, of Washington, almost before it began, yesterday claimed a second life.

Mrs. Knapp, 36, died in a Fredericksburg, Va., hospital less than 24 hours after the accident occurred and less than 20 hours after her husband died.

Meanwhile, another victim of the accident, Richard Herman, 15-year-old Baltimore youth, was near death in Fredericksburg. He was given a blood transfusion yesterday.

The accident occurred on the Washington-Richmond Highway five miles north of Fredericksburg. The machine in which the Washington couple was riding swerved on a shoulder, careened to the wrong side of the road, and struck head-on a machine driven by Richard's brother, Joseph Herman, 24, also of Baltimore.

Knapp died soon after the accident. The others were taken to a Fredericksburg Hospital.

Was G. P. O. Employe.

Mrs. Knapp was an employe of the Government Printing Office here.

Funeral services for the couple will be held at 11 a. m. Monday at the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Sixth and A streets northeast. They will be buried in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

As aftermath of another accident, a 22-year-old wife, missing since August 2, was sought last night after her husband was injured critically while returning from North Beach, Md., where he had gone to trace a false report of her whereabouts.

Condition Serious.

The husband, Charles Adams, suffered skull injuries and a broken jaw when his automobile was in collision with another on the North Beach road. He is in Walter Reed Hospital, where he is employed as a cook. Physicians describe his condition as serious.

Friends of the injured man appealed to police and newspapers to aid in locating the missing wife and inform her of her husband's condition. Her name is Mrs. Marie Adams.

She was last seen at their home, 6953 Georgia avenue northwest. The couple had an argument, police were told, and Mrs. Adams left home, saying she was going to the Takoma Park swimming pool. She failed to return. A search of several weeks has been fruitless.

Rockville Leader Hurt.

Mrs. Clara Holmes, of Rockville, chairman of the Montgomery County Board of Elections and one of this section's most prominent Republican women, was slightly injured in an automobile accident on the Rockville pike near Holpine, Md.

A car police said was driven by Ivan Bogstanoff, of 3814 Thirty-eighth street northwest, struck her machine.

David Gorman, Washington policeman who lives at Holpine, heard the crash and rushed to the scene. He followed Bogstanoff's machine for several miles, placed the man under arrest and brought him to the Rockville jail. Bogstanoff was charged with driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor and leaving the scene of an accident.

Red Men's Parley Here to Draw 1,000

More than 1,000 members of the Improved Order of Red Men will converge on Washington next Sunday for the eighty-seventh annual great council session of the order, it was announced yesterday.

The delegates will be welcomed to the city by Commissioner George E. Allen and William R. Moriarity, great sachem of the Red Men of the District of Columbia.

With more than 300,000 members in units throughout the United States, the organization is one of the largest of its kind in the United States. Arthur J. Ruland, of New York City, is its executive head.

Who is next? these pictures seem to say. The top one shows an official police photograph of a car which carried a Washingtonian to death. Lower, J. Bradford McCoy, assistant to Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, shows the year's list of deaths. Will the Labor Day week-end add more names?

Capital Autoists Urged to Drive Carefully in Labor Day Traffic

By Howard F. Wentworth.

If you drive an automobile, study these pictures carefully.

If you don't drive an automobile, study them anyway.

They portray a lesson—a lesson in death, destruction, and grief.

They show the folly of traffic recklessness. They show what can happen—and what already has happened—on highways jammed with carefree motorists bound for week-end pleasure spots.

During recent weeks, Washingtonians have numbered heavily among week-end traffic victims. With the month of September, there begins a "danger period" on highways in and near the District. Traffic records show the months of September, October, November and December bring Washington's greatest number of traffic fatalities, injuries and accidents.

Since 1932, records reveal, week-end crashes on adjacent highways during these months have taken almost as many lives as the entire year.

Many Never Return.

Cool fall days and lure of the open road take thousands of District motorists along crowded, dangerous highways. Many of them never return. And still others return, wishing they had never ventured to the beach, to the mountains or to the country for "a pleasant week-end."

In describing the traffic "danger months," Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer issued a warning to District motorists:

"We are attempting desperately to curb the mounting toll of week-end and holiday traffic mishaps," he said. "Within the city, we have a problem unlike the open road. City streets—during week-end periods—are usually deserted as compared with everyday traffic. Drivers who remain in town are apt to take advantage of relieved conditions. They drive faster—they pay little attention to intersections—they seem to feel a sense of false safety just because traffic is light.

"The answer to this is often disastrous. Our accident peak usually comes during week-end periods. If Washington motorists could spend a few hours in the emergency room of some hospital on Saturday and Sunday nights, they would soon awaken to the indescribable dangers and horrors of traffic recklessness."

Van Duzer appealed to Washington's motoring public:

"This type of week-end—with a holiday directly following—is our greatest problem. To those who venture onto traffic-jammed highways, I urge to drive sanely. If you have no regard for your life or the lives of your passengers, remember 'the other fellow.' Look at the photographs published in The Post. And then think twice."

September Toll.

Last year, during the month of September, 40 per cent of the year's total fatalities occurred. Week-ends and holidays contributed heavily to this toll.

There is a story in files at the Department of Vehicles and Traffic which graphically depicts the tragedy of holiday highway travel.

A young boy—he was 19—borrowed the family auto. Promptly at 7 a. m. on Labor Day he called at the home of his "best girl." She was 17. They had planned to spend the holiday with friends at a nearby summer resort.

With smiles on their faces and gayety in their voices, they waved farewell to the young girl's parents and drove off. Their route took them onto a narrow country road, crowded with week-ending motorists. The boy drove carefully. He had been warned not to speed.

He remained in his own line of traffic. He didn't become impatient when the car ahead moved too slowly. He was in no hurry. Then there appeared a "break" ahead of him. Traffic thinned out for a few miles.

Another car approached from the opposite direction. It was traveling at a high rate of speed. The driver was "in a hurry." But he was not familiar with the road. He noticed a sign post along the highway and jammed on his brakes.

Tire Blew Out.

Friction due to the high speed blew out a rear tire. His car swerved into the machine occupied by the boy and girl. There was a deafening crash. The girl was hurled through the windshield. The boy was trapped behind the wheel—crushed. Both died before an ambulance could be summoned.

The other man—his recklessness the cause of misery to parents, friends and relatives—escaped with scratches. He will never drive an automobile again. He is a victim of "accident horror."

And as you study these photographs—and it is pretty certain you will—place yourself behind the wheel of one of those cars. What would have happened to you—or someone you loved?

Beware of the highway.

Beware of that holiday "pleasure" trip.

And think twice—and quickly.

Bachelor Keech Selected to Pick District Princess

Richmond B. Keech, acting chairman of the Public Utilities Commission and the District government's most eligible bachelor, yesterday was put on the spot by his good friend, Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of Commissioners.

Keech was selected to head a committee to nominate a District princess for the Piedmont Dairy Festival in Manassas, Va., October 2.

Named with Keech are Dr. E. M. Colvin, jr., and Quinter Comer, both of whom are native Virginians. Keech is a native Washingtonian.

Union Strikers Back at Work In U.S. Building

Plasterers Return at Old Wage Scale of $1.50 to Interior Job.

Union plasterers, on strike since August 17 for a $1.75 an hour wage, returned to work yesterday at the new Interior Building at the old $1.50 scale.

James Buckley, business agent of the union local, announced terms of the agreement. For all work which contractors figured on or before June 4 of this year, the wage rate will be $1.50, compared to $1.75 on jobs which are figured after that date, he said.

Having obtained an agreement with the Employing Plasterers Association, effective August 15, which provide for the $1.75 scale, the union plasterers struck the Interior job when Floyd Jennings, sub-contractor, refused to meet the demanded increase.

The strike also affected the new administration building of the adult tuberculosis sanitarium under construction at Glenn Dale, Md., but only four or five men were involved.

Jennings argued that $1.50 was the prevailing rate when he contracted for the Interior Building plastering. Therefore he was not bound to comply with the agreement of August 15. Approximately 100 plasterers were in his employ when the strike was called last month.

Sixty-five of the union workmen reported to the Interior Building job yesterday. This figure will be considerably increased when operations are resumed Tuesday after the Labor Day holiday. Broken water mains prevented other plasterers from beginning work anew at Glenn Dale.

Traction Firm Seeking to Buy 30 New Buses

The Capital Transit Co. yesterday asked permission of the Public Utilities Commission to purchase 30 new 41-passenger buses at a total cost of $336,100.

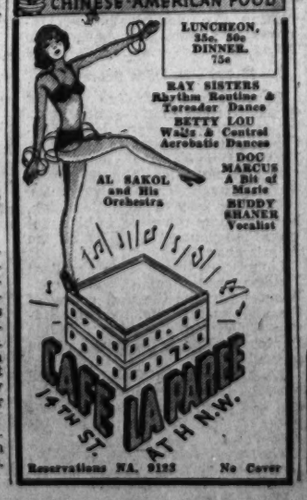
Edwin D. Merrill, general manager of the company, explained that the buses will be used to replace the three old double-deck buses formerly operated on Sixteenth street by the Washington Rapid Transit Co. and to furnish rush-hour service on all major bus arteries, especially during the winter months.

Richmond B. Keech, acting chairman of the commission, said action cannot be taken until the return to Washington next week of Lieut. Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, but he indicated there will be no opposition to the purchase in view of the complaints last winter of inadequate bus service.

The new buses are said to be the most modern motor vehicles. They are equipped with new ventilation devices ordered several weeks ago by the commission and have springs longer than present carriers, providing more comfortable transportation.

The last bus purchase made by the Capital Transit Co. was of 20 vehicles last April. The company now has 481 buses in service, 257 of which have been acquired since merger of the Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. in December, 1933.

In comparison with this expansion of bus service the company has bought only 20 new street cars since the merger and 30 second-hand cars. In addition, it has asked permission of the commission to buy 20 more used cars.



G.O.P. Assails Roosevelt's HOLC Plan

Derides Proposal Unit Be Placed Under Merit System.

Agency Now Reducing Its Personnel, Minority Party Points Out.

A suggestion by President Roosevelt to apply civil service principles to future employes of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was termed "a meaningless gesture" by the Republican Congressional Committee last night.

The suggestion was made by the President in letters to Henry D. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission, and John H. Fahey, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, of which HOLC is the largest subsidiary. The Civil Service Commission made the letter public yesterday, with the comment that the President's wishes would be followed.

The letters, the Republicans charged, in a statement, "constitute merely another meaningless gesture toward the merit system of civil service employment."

Called Futile Gesture.

"Inasmuch as the HOLC is dismissing employes rather than taking them on," the Republican statement said, "the futility of the gesture becomes apparent."

In his letter the President pointed out that the corporation was "at the conclusion of its lending activities" and was "engaged in reducing its force."

"It is at this point, and also with respect to the future work of the corporation and of the Federal Home Loan Bank board and its subsidiaries, that I am confident the Civil Service Commission, with its accepted standards, can render most effective service," he said.

Previously he had explained that in order to organize the HOLC service quickly it had been necessary to select employes without regard to the provisions of the civil service act. During its three years of existence, he said, the corporation has "progressively sought to test and select its employes on the basis of merit."

Action by Congress Needed.

In both his letters he asserted that Congressional action would be necessary to give present employes status under the "competitive classified service."

"Much of the emergency is past," he said, "and the work of the board has been stabilized."

According to Fahey, the announcement did not mean the displacement of present HOLC jobholders by persons on the civil service list.

"It means," he said, "the ultimate adoption of civil service standards of efficiency throughout the corporation and anticipates the possibility of future action of Congress to place the organization under civil service."

A commission official said yesterday that civil service experts might soon make a classification study of the agencies involved.

New Staff Change Is Made by Seal

Elwood H. Seal, corporation counsel, yesterday announced further reorganization of his legal staff as a sequel to the appointment of two assistants earlier in the week.

Rice Hoe, who has been acting counsel of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, was placed in charge of the corporation counsel's staff, assigned to Police Court. Stanley De Neale, who has been on the Police Court staff for nine years, was transferred to the main office and made counsel of the A. B. C. board, if was said.

F. Glenn Simmon, named assistant corporation counsel a few days ago, and John O'Dea, formerly assistant inspector of claims, will join George D. Neilson at Police Court as aids to Hoe.

Retired Fireman Dies Mysteriously; Two Women Held

William Grover Jenkins, 49-year-old retired fireman, was found dead under mysterious circumstances last night in the kitchen of 516 Tenth street southeast, where he lived. He had been stabbed twice in the right leg, just above the knee.

Two women occupants of the house were held for investigation. They are Mrs. Anna Marie Sanford, 42, and Edna Margaret Weaver, 35.

Jenkins, retired from the Fire Department because of injuries several years ago, was sitting in a kitchen chair, his head slumped on a table. He was fully dressed.

Jenkins and the two women apparently had been drinking, the police said. Empty bottles were scattered about the kitchen. Officers had been called to the house twice before during the day. The first time, at 3:30 p. m., was in answer to a trouble call. The second was "woman screaming." On both occasions the house was quiet when the police arrived.

Fred Astaire's Dancing Forms Film's Appeal

'Swing Time,' at Keith's, Is Feeble in Plot; Other Bills.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"SWING TIME." RKO-Radio picturization of an original story by Erwin Gelsen and Howard Lindsay, adapted to the screen by Allan Scott, costarring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, with Victor Moore, Eric Blore, Georges Metaxa, Helen Broderick, and dancing ensemble. Music by Jerome Kern. Directed by George Stevens. Previewed Monday night, August 31.

It has already been intimated in this space that "Swing Time" has slight excuse for its existence otherwise than as a vehicle for the extraordinary dancing of Fred Astaire, aided and abetted, as usual, by Ginger Rogers. These two could carry any film by the sheer potency of their "hoofing"—which is well, since "Swing Time" has no great amount of anything else to offer.

BELL.

The story here unfolded, frankly, is just so much fol-de-rol, boasting no rhyme or reason beyond providing the excuse for the extravagant stepping of Astaire and the graceful aiding and abetting hereinbefore referred to on the part of Miss Rogers. It seems to me that there is something in the way of a young man's attempting to shake off one love in order to devote himself to a beautiful young dancing teacher by way of plot, but I would not be too sure. Whatever the purpose of the picture may be in the matter of narrative is of no importance, anyway, because romance is deeply buried under comedy and rhythm once the film gets going.

Off to Slow Start.

This is not at once. "Swing Time" takes a seemingly interminable time in swinging into its proper tempo. The frustrated wedding and the bride left waiting at the church, forming the introductory sequences of the picture, are enormously tardy in generating any momentum whatever. Once the action shifts to the night clubs, however, and some outlet is provided for the nimble feet and wit of the stars and their supporting players things begin to look up.

The Astaire-Rogers combination does not have things entirely its own way in this subject. They are egged on to their best efforts by the presence in the cast of those two glorious old troupers, Victor Moore and Helen Broderick, who are always funny but could be more so in this item if their material were a little better. Miss Broderick possesses a contagious sort of humor that never fails to "get over," and Mr. Moore, of course, is one of the theater's old reliables in the matter of drollery. But something seems to have happened to the Moore grotesquery here—his voice has been deepened beyond any hope of plaintiveness by the sound recording mechanism and the Throttlebottom personality has merged itself into something considerably more assertive and not nearly so amusing.

Contagious Kern Tunes.

But all that matters, in this one, is the dancing. There are several Jerome Kern tunes to which the co-stars adjust themselves with complete success. My favorites are the "Waltz in Swing Time," danced by Astaire and Rogers, and "Mr. Bojangles of Harlem," done in blackface by Fred. Here is a solo number that is truly remarkable. I am told that it was filmed as a continuous stage number, just as it would have been executed on the rostrum of the living theater, and that no retakes were inserted. Since the number consumes something like six minutes, that is an amazing achievement for the cameras, microphones and Mr. Astaire. No wonder Bill Robinson, the original "Mr. Bojangles," cabled congratulations from London!

The trick of having Astaire dance before three of his shadows is a clever one, but not inexplicable to any one familiar with the wizardry of present-day photography. It is a little surprising, nevertheless, when those three shadows step out on their own and do a few steps that Astaire has not done in sight of the audience.

Will Click at B. O.

Sometime, someone will write a story that will do justice to the ability of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers to play parts of some moment as well as dance like nobody's business. It has not been done in "Swing Time." But since the Astaire dancing still is the major raison d'etre of any excuse to place him upon the screen, we shall not quibble about the frailty of his present vehicle. It will probably be on after all criticisms of it have been forgotten.

The bill, as usual, is completed by brief house features and a new release of the Pathe News, visualizing what the cameraman deemed to be the important world events of the last seven-day period in history at home and abroad.

"YOURS FOR THE ASKING." Paramount picturization of a story by William R. Lipman and William H. Wright, adapted to the screen by Eve Greene, Harlan Ware, and Phillip MacDonald, costarring George Raft and Dolores Costello Barrymore, with Ida Lupino, Reginald Owen, James Gleason, Edgar Kennedy, Lynne Overman, Richard "Skeets" Gallagher, and Walter Walker. Directed by Alexander Hall. Reviewed Friday by Mary Harris.

A new Barrymore of great promise is brought to the screen in "Yours for the Asking," currently at the Capitol. Well—a Barrymore by marriage, anyway, one who has been absent from the screen for so long that her return is almost like a screen debut.

For Dolores Costello Barrymore has performed the feat of returning to pictures even more beautiful and a better actress than she was ten years ago when she left the screen to marry John Barrymore and raise a family. If that isn't a neat trick, you tell us what is one.

"Yours for the Asking" involves Miami and one of its chief industries—gambling—with George Raft as the proprietor of a "farm" where the only thing they raise is the ante. One of the nicest things about young Mr. Raft is that he doesn't even try to act. He busts his way successfully through one show after another by the masterly strategy of just being George Raft—the guy with the hard eyes and level voice and startling grin. In "Yours for the Asking" he adds some very murderous boxing of the barroom genre.

Gambling Goes Snooty.

Dolores Costello Barrymore enters the story as a bankrupt society girl who takes a final desperate whirl at gambling in an effort to get on her feet, financially. Finding out that she can't beat Mr. Raft, she joins him as a partner. She contributes the social prestige and he the business head.

But Georgie's chief aids do not like this idea of going high "clerss," and they upset the applecart by hiring one Gerty Malloy, played by Ida Lupino, to vamp him away from his too elite companions. From there on, the show goes completely screwy in a grand way.

But this is inevitable, considering that Georgie's lowbrow sidekicks are played by Jimmie Gleason, Lynne Overman and Edgar Kennedy, with Reginald Owen, as an amiable old double-crosser, and "Skeets" Gallagher putting in a too-brief appearance.

One can hardly overdo the credit due to this bunch of character fellows. They enrich and ripen the pitcure and speed it along to its crack-of-the-whip ending with never a slack in pace or a dull moment when they are around.

The shorts this week include a pippin with Bert Lahr. It's partly about buttling, partly about steak sauce and partly about the sweepstakes. Another tops short presents our fine feathered friends (birds, really!) with their own sound effects.

The Stage Bill.

Phil Lampkin steps out and up this week with a trick overture guaranteed to please all of the people most of the time. It blends classics with the new radio hits and includes, unbelievable as it sounds, "Kammenoi Ostrow," "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody" and "On the Beach at Bali Bali." Phil, we dare you next week to combine the Kreutzer Sonata and "Knock, Knock."

The Three X Sisters top off their act delightfully with a novelty song about radio sound effects. Another sisterly trio, the Gaylene Sisters, right from London, go in for clever acrobatic and tap dancing in the glittering manner.

The little Japanese girls of the Eno troupe are cuter than dolls and no end smart, while the act as a whole shows fine acrobatics and is well staged. Barto and Mann, always favorites at the Capitol, again put the audience into stitches.

"AND SUDDEN DEATH." Paramount picturization of a story by Theodore Reeves and Madeleine Ruthven, suggested by the article by J. C. Furnas, with screen play by Joseph Moncure March, featuring Randolph Scott, Frances Drake, Tom Brown, and Fuzzy Knight, supported by Billy Lee, Terry Walker, Porter Hall, John Hyams, Joseph Sawyer, Don Rowan, and Charles Arnt. Directed by Charles Barton. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Every little while the motion picture industry becomes civic minded—on a nation-wide basis—and turns out a picture or two on some particular phase of American life which at the moment deserves wide-spread attention. Laudable as these have been in purpose, many have lacked certain elements of entertainment which screen attractions should have: others have been sheer propaganda with unbelievable lack of mass appeal.

In "And Sudden Death," Paramount Pictures' production suggested by J. C. Furnas' thought-provoking article a few months back in the Reader's Digest, there is an admirable combination of thrilling melodrama, full of violent action, and a forthright declamation on the potentially lethal consequences of reckless driving.

Keyed to a high dramatic pitch, with little or no comedy to relieve the tension of the action, and making a direct play on the emotions, lapsing (but not seriously) for a moment almost to "tear-jerking," the picture unfolds its unvarnished preachment.

Is Action Drama.

An action story per se, "And Sudden Death" will satisfy the cravings of most seekers after this brand of entertainment with its mad driving, its near—and consummated accidents (mostly fatal), and the drama inherent in unjustified prison sentences. But, the while, the picture brooks nothing to interfere with its direct propaganda appeal—that traffic accidents come from excessive speed and recklessness.

This particular admixture of motives on the part of producers has not always been fortunate, but here entertainment and propaganda join hands to make a drama which, stark yet enjoyable, compelling yet educational, is just about the finest work of this type to be made.

Randolph Scott is the crusading traffic expert with advanced ideas for the discouragement of reckless speedsters and centers his case on Frances Drake, as the unthinkingly wild driver. When Billy Lee is killed as the result of a bus scrash caused by Tom Brown's drunken driving, Miss Drake takes the blame and goes to prison from which she is released through Brother Tom's death-bed confession. Roughly, that is the narrative skeleton!

Possesses Love Interest.

Embellish that with an enactment of Mr. Scott's educational program, many an insane dash about the city's streets, and crashes galore and you have "And Sudden Death." There is, of course, an amatory thread running through the story, involving Mr. Scott and Miss Drake, which is all right, but it is rather inconsequention in the light of the greater interest and value of the other aspects of the picture.

The pivotal players, as indicated above, are sufficiently well known to let pass any particular comment on their work, and to state that the other members of the company are as efficient is sufficient appraisal, for the intense appeal of this work is not the players but what they do.

So compellingly dramatic is this picture that the supplementary subjects seem less interesting than usual. "Porky, the Rain-Maker" achieves his end in typically Looney-Tune manner; Jack Norton, with Billy Gilbert and Vivian Oakland, become embroiled in a marital farce of dubious merit and the combined releases of Paramount and Universal news reels round out a program quite dominated by the feature.

"THE GORGEOUS HUSSY." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the novel by Samuel Hopkins Adams, adapted to the screen by Ainsworth Morgan and Stephen Morehouse Avery, starring Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, and Lionel Barrymore, supported by Melvyn Douglas, Franchot Tone, Beulah Bondi, Sidney Toler, and James Stewart. Directed by Clarence Brown. Reviewed, second week, by Dorothea Lewis.

For all of Peggy O'Neale's reputation, it is politics, not romance, that gives her story its high lights.

The friendly fights of Daniel Webster and John Randolph, the troubles of Andrew Jackson and his Rachel, are the colorful and moving events in a story of early Washington, giving it enough of interest to tide over dull spots and the overlongness of the whole too-handsome production.

The period of the story of Peggy O'Neale's loves and political faiths is one of strife and conflict, not so far removed. Cries of State's rights, and attacks on the Constitution, echo familiarly in the halls of Congress and in Washington taverns.

Through it all moves a rather unreal Peg, with nothing of the hussy or hoyden about her, loving one man all her life, but marrying two others, first "Bow" Timberlake, a handsome and gay young sailor who is killed while on duty, and next John Eaton, Secretary of War in Andrew Jackson's Cabinet.

Joan Crawford makes far too great a lady out of Peg, with a consequent loss of appeal. Robert Taylor's "Bow" is bright and attractive, but nothing else, and death soon removes him from the scene, while ladies sigh.

Melvyn Douglas Scores.

Opposed to the routine work of these two romantics, that of a quartet of character actors, lends brilliance and movement to the story. Melvyn Douglas is a young actor who does not allow himself just to walk through leading men roles, and as the fiery Senator Randolph, he is far more romantic, in his quiet way, than young "Bow" for all the latter's charm.

Lionel Barrymore is an excellent Jackson, and Beulah Bondi contributes perhaps the best acting of them all as his wife, Rachel. Sidney Toler, an altogether likable Daniel Webster, is the fourth of the quartet.

Washington might well have liked more of these four and of politics and less of the lady-in-distress, but probably the rest of the country wouldn't.

The usual subsidiaries, including an unusual short reel, "Killer Dog," complete the holdover bill.

Alaska's Gift to the Cinema

This charming young woman would be Terry Walker, born in Alaska, a resident of Hollywood for 10 years and finally discovered by Paramount talent scouts singing in a Miami night club—Miss Walker, not the scouts. This gifted young lady will be seen on the screen at the Metropolitan Theater this week, in Paramount's protest against reckless driving, "And Sudden Death," a picture suggested by a magazine article that attracted national attention. Frances Drake and Tom Brown appear in the stellar roles.

Commercial Aviation Plot Stars Pat O'Brien and Beverly Roberts.

"CHINA CLIPPER." First National picturization of a story by Commander Frank Wead, featuring Pat O'Brien and Beverly Roberts, with Ross Alexander, Humphrey Bogart, Marie Wilson, Joseph Crehan, the late Henry B. Walthall, Kenneth Harlan, Joseph King, Ruth Robinson, and Anne Nagel. Directed by Raymond Enright. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

This thing gets a little too technical for the casual appetite. It is all very well to promote transoceanic air travel, but when the business of promotion gets in the way of sound dramaturgy, that is something else again. It is my worthless opinion that "China Clipper" gets in its own way more than once by attempting to combine entertainment with a palpable exploitation of a means of locomotion that needs no celluloid boost.

The whole business goes back to the Lindbergh flight to France in 36 hours. If that could be done, then there is no reason why other oceans could not be spanned by bigger and better ships. That is the gist of the whole affair.

There is a tremendous amount of dialogue that seeks to expound something or other, but most of it falls dead at the feet of he auditor. When Mr. O'Brien sounds off there is something flagrantly specious about everything he says. The speeches were written to be recited, not lived.

And the promising Miss Beverly Roberts, who made so auspicious a debut as leading woman with Al Jolson in "The Singing Kid" here demonstrates herself to be merely an elocutioniste, and not too good a one, at that.

On the stage, the Bob Crosby Orchestra does pretty well for itself. Bob was last seen here as a singing star with the Dorsey Brothers' band, but now he branches out as a full-fledged conductor, with a handy crew at his command. His specialists, singers and the McDonalds, dancers, contribute generously to an entertainment that will linger in memory as one of the more diverting intervals of music the season has produced.

The newsreel and orchestral contributions, under the conductorship of Freddie Clark, round out the program.

Columbia

"PICCADILLY JIM." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the story by P. G. Wodehouse, adapted to the screen by Charles Brackett and Edwin Knopf, starring Robert Montgomery, with Madge Evans, Frank Morgan, Eric Blore, Cora Witherspoon, Robert Benchley, Billie Burke, Ralph Forbes, Tommy Bupp, Allen Pringle, Grant Mitchell, E. E. Clive, and Billy Bevan. Directed by Robert Z. Leonard. Reviewed, repeat engagement, by Sally Stroud.

Wodehouse's casually charming caricaturist, Picadilly Jim, comes to life in the person of Robert Montgomery. Frank Morgan is the ex-actor or father, Eric Blore; Bayliss, the valet. Sometimes it almost seems Blore is the star of the show. Darning socks, finishing-out quotations and inspiring Jim to new feats of daring are a few of his duties, besides making sure young master wears the correct tie.

Intricate, never boring, jumping about with facile ease, the plot has to do with Jim's pursuit of a girl named Ann (Madge Evans), who has the misfortune of having a family who are ideal caricature-material. Fluffy Billie Burke, the beloved of Jim's father, is also one of this delineable group. Morgan has to resort to a crepe beard disguise to win her. Jim has to dispose of a rival nobleman to obtain Ann. Bayliss has to see the whole procedure through to the bitter end, which he does with dignified restraint.

Mr. Benchley Doubles.

In a bridlepath scene one character says to another, "Shall we canter?" And that is just what this play does . . . canters along at an elegant half-trot, revealing itself each minute as being a neat concoction which all Wodehouse lovers and a goodly percentage of the rest of the population will find amusing and intriguing. And Miss Evans' white dinner dresses are some of the best things Dolly Tree has ever done. (Fashion note.)

Not content with appearing in the feature, Robert Benchley crops up again in one of the short subjects, a hilarious miniature called "How to Behave." Discussing such vital questions as "What would you do if a lady fell in a manhole while you were down there eating your lunch?", this treatise presents Benchley as head of the Etiquette Department. His picturization of the week-end guest, the story-teller, etc., are classical contributions to the worth of the bill.

Newsreel, pictorials, short subjects, are here in great amount; the bill is lavishly full. You may enjoy Henry Scott's piano tricks in one of the briefer bits.

CHAPTER 5.
Synopsis.

Shortly after the World War Roger Mallard, handsome young Englishman, is embittered by the loss of hearing in one ear from a war injury. Mal has been raised by his godfather, William Grimwold, an actor. Grimmy persuades Mal to attend Maude Copley's New Year's eve party, where he meets lovely young Pamella Wyeth, though he forgets her on meeting Zelia Manners. A month later Mal marries Zelda. After two years the marriage ends disastrously. In a rage at his failure to make a living on the stage Zelda flings a mirror at Mal and unknowingly destroys the hearing in his one good ear. Grimmy arouses Mal from grief stricken dissipation. Fourteen years later, under Grimmy's tutelage, Mal has become a great success in pictures, hiding his affliction from his public. Pamella Wyeth has a home in Pasadena.

A Mystery Idol.

David Barkley's bats had been of such major proportions for the last month that his allowance was drained pretty low. As he intended to make tomorrow night—New Year's eve—a real bender, perhaps tonight's pastimes had best fall into the minor class. Dad's last letter sounded as if he really meant to cut his allowance if he didn't tone down. Though dad's business aroused his contempt esthetically, it came in handily at times. On the whole he had a deep respect for its sterling ability to weather all financial storms. Depressions might come and go, but the world went on eating breakfast food.

However, he, being a devotee of the drama, had declined to become a mere cog in the manufacture of the people's leading rib padder, so he told his father. As he was the crown prince of the Barkley family, and altogether the apple of his father's eye, that harassed parent representing commerce was forced weak with love and worry, to give way to the implacable stand of the arts.

The elder Barkley's first move was to turn for help to the daughter of his lifelong friend, the late William Wyeth. He knew that Pamalla got on like a house on fire with men, young and old. He knew she was desperately hard up, saddled with that magnificent estate of hers and not much else. He knew that she was prominent in community drama circles in and around Los Angeles; that she was fond of him and his family.

So, from his home in Seattle, Jim Barkley wrote to dear Pam. He told her David had a highfalutin notion of being a picture director or a playwright, so David must give it a try and get it out of his system. He didn't hold with pulling wires, but if she could see her way to taking David in it would be a great comfort to know he wasn't entirely adrift. She'd find him fundamentally sound, with not a trace of deceit in him. But he could be pretty exasperating.

Honest But Uncertain.

So desperate had Pamella considered her financial plight that she had seized with delight upon the monthly sum David's room and board would give her. During the two months he'd been under her foot she'd found that his father had summed him up correctly. He was as honest as bread and as uncertain as quicksilver. So far his research in the drama had been overshadowed by the pursuit of things alcoholic.

But tonight, after due consideration, young Mr. Barkley decided to pass up the bottle in favor of the drama. Through one of the wires his father had pulled to David had been given a ticket to the gorgeous premiere of Roger Mallard's new picture which was to dedicate and open Sol Goldberg's new theater. For the past weeks the papers had been filled with interesting speculations about the latest Mallard production, awaited for over a year. Magazines had likewise been filled with articles and stunning pictures descriptive of the new theater which the enemy Mr. Goldberg, head of Supreme Artists, had built despite the depression and the dire predictions of his competitors.

When David arrived at the dazzling entrance of the Theater Mallard, looking every inch the crown prince in his new tuxedo, which fitted his tall, young person as perfectly as his own skin, with his dark hair as smooth as lacquer, his little thread of mustache, around which it took him an hour to shave, rivaling Roger Mallard's own upper lip adornment, and his dark eyes made glittery by the excitement snapping in the air, and by the snifter with which he'd fortified himself for the evening, young Mr. Barkley acknowledged that he had made no mistake in his choice of penultimate New Year's eve pastimes.

It was a sight to see the boulevard jammed with cars from curb to curb. (He'd had the devil of a time getting his second-hand car parked.) Mobs were banked along the sidewalk and in front of the theater, held back in their eager scrutiny of the great ones of the moving picture world by the police. Floodlights sent dazzling shafts up into the blue-black heavens and over the towering white walls of Mr. Goldberg's modernistic palace of the drama.

All the usual inanities of such openings had been done away with. 'By golly," Sol Goldberg had remarked to his greatest star and director, "the dear friends of radio land aren't goin' to have any free self-advertising squawked at 'em by two-bit stars at your opening, Mal. We're out this time to rake in high-brow money."

And so, thanks to Sol Goldberg's shrewd Far sighted vision, Roger Mallard's latest premiere got off to another smashing success enshrouded with classic beauty. Every one seemed to be happily exuberant

Mr. Barkley made his way through the jam at the doors. He saw women behind the ropes looking at him and nudging each other. He even heard one say: "Look, Gert! Isn't that Roger Mallard himself?" and he felt distinctly pleased.

Road to Success.

The old boy in the office pulled by dad's wire had certainly done him well. David had a Venetian pink velour seat in the mezzanine balcony which must have set the office back at least ten bucks. The house was going to be packed.

If ever the cream of southland society and the picture world was assembled together, it was assembled here. And every woman present, beside the millions scattered throughout the world, would be nursing a secret passion for the great, the mysterious Roger Mallard.

Mallard was indeed the greatest mystery in the picture world. He had outgarboed Garbo as a recluse long before she was ever heard of. The man and his private affairs were completely hidden behind the splendid blaze of his work, so vivid and unforgettable was the gallery of characters he had created. He was never interviewed, scarcely ever seen. Never had his name been linked with any woman. Whether he was married or not remained an unsolved item, though gossip was inclined to have it that there was a wife somewhere. How he lived and where, what he did with himself, who his friends were, aside from his long and close relationship with his elderly director, William Grimwold, who had, by the way, suddenly died last week, was unknown. If this blank wall hemming him in had been raised by Goldberg to build up a sure-fire box office hit, it had worked spectacularly. The public liked it. They liked speculating about a myth called Roger Mallard.

It was vaguely understood, though no stamp of authentic truth had ever been placed upon it, that Roger Mallard had come out of the provincial theaters of England. He had first appeared on the screen some 13 years ago as leading man with Rose Stanton, when Rose had gone to Rome to make a silent version of "The Marble Faun."

After Mallard's appearance in "The Marble Faun" it was definitely known that Sol Goldberg had grabbed him up along with that sterling English actor, William Grimwold, who had forsaken the London stage to become young Mallard's director. This triumvirate, abetted from the start by an inspired cameraman named Bert Glenford, had gone on holding sway up to the present time. Even David could remember the long series of pictures of breathtaking beauty as to acting and directing and photography with which these years had been punctuated at carefully timid infrequent intervals. Sol saw to it that his star should become romance incarnate to all women. But he didn't forget the masculine quarters and half dollars either. The Mallard screen heroes by their virility, their humor, their inescapable charm and their dynamic authority captured the men also.

Film Personalities

Hollywood, Sept. 4.

The Hollywood tourists can now see a picture studio without knowing someone in a studio. A sight-seeing bus now goes through the Warner Studio and points out the sights to the visitors for a fee of $4.50 per person . . . Groucho Marx, on the set of "A Day at the Races," when asked "What's new?" answers: "Certainly not the jokes here" . . . Lawrence Tibbett, wanting to study his role, asked the actor in the next dressing room to stop playing the Victrola. The actor was playing the Lawrence Tibbett recording of "It Ain't Necessarily So."

MERLE OBERON.

Toby Wing is an actress who is handling her movie career perfectly and is getting along fine . . . You can see Toby's pictures in the fan magazines, and read about Toby's romances, but you'll never actually see her on the screen in a picture. Not Toby . . . An actress gets a great role, makes a hit in a picture, and then has to repeat or she is on the decline. Not Toby Wing. She can last in flickers for years the way she is going. She isn't going to play in a picture and ruin her career.

Simone Simon never pulls down the window shades of her apartment, which is why rents have gone up in her district.

• • • •

Ted Healy buying joke books at a shop on Wilshire boulevard, which means that he is working on a scene for his new picture . . . A "quickie" company is making a Western picture. They hired a number of genuine cowboys, who loiter about Main street, waiting for a chance in pictures . . . The "quickie" firm believed it would be cheaper to let the cowboys use their own guns, with real bullets, than to buy blank cartridges. And in the big scene two Indians were grazed with bullets.

• • • •

Merle Oberon has a photograph of Norma Shearer in the Juliet costume on her dressing room table . . . On the photograph, Miss Shearer wrote: "To Merle—from One Giggler to Another."

• • • •

Robert Taylor appears in only half of the flicker, "The Gorgeous Hussy," and then is dropped. Considering the fact that Taylor is the most popular star in pictures today this is a daring gesture. . . . Big Boy Williams and Myra Bratton, Metro cutie, are no longer playing "Boy Meets Girl." . . . At a quickie studio where they are filming a picture about the South, they fought the entire Civil War behind a hedge, because the studio didn't have money enough to buy boots for the soldiers . . . Groucho Marx, at the conclusion of his new flicker, "A Day at the Races," wants to appear on the screen and make this brief speech: "At that, I bet it's better than the other picture on this bill."

Burnett's 71 Wins Medal in District Amateur Golf Trials

Newsom Holds Mackmen as Mates Hit Slants of Lisenbee.

Chapman Leads Attack With 2 Singles, Triple; Aids in 4 Runs.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Taking advantage of the presence of the last-place Athletics in the city, the Nats yesterday won a ball game, staked a clear claim to fourth place and altered the first-division picture to their great good satisfaction.

Surveying the results after their 7-3 conquest of the Athletics, the Nats find themselves in undisputed possession of a first-division berth, within a half-game of the third-place Detroit Tigers and only a scant two games behind second place now occupied by the fading Cleveland Indians.

That ball game yesterday was won with a nice bit of collaboration by Buck Newsom and Ben Chapman. Newsom attended to the pitching, limiting the A's to nine hits, and Chapman attended to the bulk of the hitting. With a triple and two singles bouncing off his bat, Chapman scored three runs, drove in a fourth and had a hand in three of the Nats' four scoring rallies.

Ancient Horace Lisenbee, who was a young hopeful with the Nats 10 years ago, was Connie Mack's pitching choice and Mack found it expedient to withdraw him for a pinch hitter at the end of five innings, what with the Nats' 10 hits and four runs off him in that period.

As late as the fifth inning, the result was very much in doubt with the teams locked in a 3-to-3 tie, but Chapman cleared matters up satisfactorily with a lengthy triple to leftfield that was the pivotal blow of a two-run uprising.

Both clubs had a taste of the lead in the first inning with Finney's double putting the A's in front, 1 to 0, and singles by Chapman, Kuhel and Stone lifting the Nats right back into a 2-to-1 lead.

It was 3 to 1 at the end of the second, when Mihalic and Millies rapped out singles and Newsom enjoyed the dubious distinction of driving a run across by hitting into a double play.

Newsom set up a run for the A's in the third when he walked Finney with one out and pitched singles to Moses and Dean, and in the fifth another base on balls, a wild pitch, Finney's single and Kuhel's muff of a ground ball admitted the A's to a 3-to-3 tie.

But Newsom was in control after that. The A's put men on bases in all of the last four innings, but Newsom left 'em there whenever a hit could be translated into a run.

Newsom himself inspired the Nats' winning rally when he opened the fifth with a single to right. Chapman promptly scored him with a well-tagged triple to left and scooted home himself on Lewis' single that followed.

Just in case, the Nats added another pair of runs off young Ross in the seventh when Chapman and Kuhel singled and Stone smashed a double off Newsome's glove.

Red Sox Buy Desautels From San Diego Club

Boston, Sept. 4 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox, American League baseball club, announced today purchase of Catcher Gene Desautels from the San Diego, Calif., club of the Coast League for 1937 delivery.

Desautels, formerly Holy Cross College and Detroit catcher, has been batting .312 out on the coast, Eddie Collins, Red Sox business manager, reported.

Anne Govednik Eyes Pros.

Chisholm, Minn., Sept. 4 (AP).—Anne Govednik, 19-year-old member of the United States women's Olympic swimming team, announced her retirement from amateur competition when she returned home from Germany today. She added, in response to questions, that she would turn professional if she received a suitable offer.

French Blanks Pirates, 8 to 0; Cubs Gain

Hurler Allows Only 7 Hits for 17th; Chicago Now 4½ Games Behind.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 4.—The third-place Chicago Cubs picked up half a game on the National League pace-setters today by trouncing the Pirates, 8 to 0, behind Larry French's seven-hit pitching.

With the league-leading Giants and second-place Cardinals idle, the victory left the Cubs four and one-half games back of the New Yorkers and half a game away from the gas house gang.

The victory was French's seventeenth of the season. He was opposed at the start by Bill Swift, but Mace Brown was called on to finish up after he had given up a dozen hits in the less than eight innings he worked.

Ethan Allen, with a double and two singles, and Billy Herman, with two singles which drove in three runs, led the 14-hit batting attack the Cubs fired at Swift and Brown.

They opened up with a run in the first on Allen's single, his stolen base and Herman's base hit. Three more came across in the second on singles by Gabby Hartnett, Woody English, French's grounder and Herman's second single.

Red Sox Are Out Of Pennant Chase

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 4.—The American League race, already narrowed down to six clubs, became a five-team affair today with elimination of the Boston Red Sox.

Although the New York Yankees virtually are conceded the pennant, there still is a slim mathematical possibility for the Indians, Tigers, Senators and White Sox to catch up, if the New Yorkers should go into a tremendous losing slump.

The Red Sox were counted out of this group by their defeat at the Yankees hands today, following the Browns and Athletics, who fell three weeks ago.

The Yanks, meantime, need just seven more victories out of their 23 remaining games to clinch the flag.

Judge Latimer Shoots an Ace, And On the Fly

To the distinction of making a hole in one, Judge J. W. Latimer, of Chevy Chase Club, yesterday added the miracle of making it on the fly. Playing in company with his son, John Latimer, the judge tried a spade mashie on the 148-yard tenth hole on the Chevy Chase course, to see the ball arch gracefully over the green, and drop into the cup without so much as a bounce.

The shot was made to a temporary green, just between the original one and the formidable traps to the side of it. A high curve is necessary to keep the ball from rolling over into the too accessible rough. Accustomed to using his mashie to reach the regular green, the judge changed his mind at the last minute, and borrowed a No. 8 iron from his son.

For the local jurist, who has been playing for 15 years, today's was his first ace. The shot was the turning point in the match as he then went on to beat his opponent after losing the first nine.

When asked how he felt, Judge Latimer chuckled, "A little dizzy. And a funny thing: My son felt dizzy too. That's why he lost the last nine. He says he is going to give me that club."

Youth Ready to Carry Family Name to New Glory in Sports.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The Injuns are coming, in fact they've already been to the Post sports department. They came trooping in last night—three of them, members of the famous Guyon Tribe, whose feats on the gridiron and diamond are legion. There was Uncle Charley Guyon, the Eastern High School coach whose teams have been heap much bad medicine to their inter-high rivals for a decade or more; his little brother, Joe, and Joe's "little" boy, Joe, jr., who has yet to win his spurs.

The boys were smoking the peace pipe. Every man and boy who follows sports in this city knows Uncle Charley. He is one of the old landmarks of the athletic system, and just as important to it as the air in a football. But you have to be an old-timer to know about big Joe for he is of the old school, or schools—he played at a couple of them. Of course little Joe has yet to be heard from, but both Uncle Charley and Pappa Joe are dead certain he will be.

Started Football in 1908.

Joe, senior, began playing football almost as soon as he made the startling discovery that his legs could carry him places, and pretty quickly, too, but it wasn't until he entered prep school in 1908 that he had his first taste of organized football. Joe thought the other boys were sissies because they wore football pants, shin guards and headgear.

Joe was a mighty fine gridman but was unfortunate enough to be at Carlisle in 1912 and 1913 when Thorpe's meteor-like play was setting the gridiron firmament ablaze. But Joe's speed was something marvelous, and, like all the rest of those proud Redskins, he was rough and tough and knew the game from A to Z and back again, and Thorpe or no Thorpe, Joe Guyon's name also was pushed to the fore in football.

In 1916 Georgia Tech sent for him to help put the Engineers on the grid map. He was at Tech until '18, and then branched off into professional football, signing up with the New York Giants. While with the Giants that he met Jack Hagerty and George Murtagh, both now coaching at Georgetown.

Pro Player at 26.

Joe probably still would be playing pro football but for a rule of the Louisville Baseball Club, which ordered him to devote all of his time to the diamond sport. Joe was 26 years old when he took a fling at pro baseball and found it much to his liking. He still has a good batting eye and his natural speed made him a terror on the pathways and a tower of strength in the outfield. He played with Atlanta in the Southern Association in addition to Louisville.

By some strange quirk of fate it was baseball that dealt Joe the lone serious injury of his life, a bad knee. He crashed into a fence chasing a fly ball while with Louisville and was carried off the field. A rookie outfielder's failure to shout a warning caused the accident.

Joe never got to the majors because the minor league clubs placed a prohibitive price on his baseball head and the major league magnates figured he was too old to command a fancy figure. He is still good enough to play in fast semipro company. You can find him any

Lazzeri Stars As Yanks Top Boston, 9-6

Homer Drives In 3 Runs; Foxx Slams Out 36th; Add to Lead.

Boston, Sept. 4 (AP).—While the batting slumps of Lou Gehrig and Jie Dimaggio sent them through another hitless day today, there was nothing wrong with Tony Lazzeri's hitting eye, and so the New York Yankees trounced the Red Sox 9 to 6 in their series opener.

Lazzeri connected with one of Fritz Ostermueller's slants in the fourth inning, with two men on base, and drove out his thirteenth homer of the season to account for three runs, the margin by which the Sox were downed.

The victory boosted the Yanks' league lead to 17½ games over the idle second-place Cleveland Indians.

Johnny Murphy started for the Yankees, and received credit for the win, but had to be relieved by Pat Malone in the seventh after Jimmy Foxx's thirty-sixth homer of the campaign sent three Boston runs across and blasted him off the mound.

Lazzeri's circuit clout came during a five-run Yankee rally in the fourth, which belted Ostermueller out. Jack Wilson finished the game.

The Sox outhit the Yanks 11 to 8, but weren't as effective at the plate with men on base.

Nats After 3d Place; Cascarella to Pitch

Third place in the league standings is the ambition of the Nats today as they resume their series with the Athletics at Griffith Stadium

Trailing the Tigers by only a half game, the Nats could capture third place if they turn in a victory while the Tigers lose to the Browns.

Joe Cascarella will be sent to the hill by Manager Bucky Harris. The two teams conclude their four-game series with a double-header Sunday.

Blair Heard; Bribe Charge Probe Due

Boxer Convinces District Body of $1,000 Offer to 'Lay Down.'

City Detectives Called In; Criminal Prosecution Held Probable.

The District Boxing Commission, at the end of a two-day hearing, yesterday satisfied itself that Frankie Blair had been tendered a $1,000 bribe to "take a dive," and announced that the case had been placed in the hands of the Detective Bureau.

Confirming the bribery report, which first appeared in The Washington Post, the commission in a prepared statement following its meeting announced:

"All three members of the commission are convinced that Blair is telling the truth in his statement that he was approached with the bribe offer."

Blair first made his charge when, in a letter to The Washington Post, he declared that he had been approached last summer in a local restaurant by a Washington boxing figure and was offered $1,000 to "lay down" to Carey Wright in a forthcoming bout.

Ignorant of Name.

The commission paid the expenses of Blair and his brother-manager, Mickey, to Washington for the hearing, and was in session throughout Thursday night and yesterday morning. Blair testified at length, but confessed ignorance of the identity of the would-be briber, although declaring that he would know him on sight.

Taking Blair to task for not reporting the incident when it occurred, the commission in its statement said: "The commission made it plain that it is by no means through with its investigations and will continue the search in cooperation with the Detective Bureau, for the man described by Blair.

"The commission made it plain also that if and when the man concerned is apprehended he will not be haled before the commission, but the commission will bring criminal charges under the criminal code."

White Shoots 71, Leads at Hershey

Espinosa, Cooper Tied for Second; Walper in Forward Group.

By the Associated Press.

Hershey, Pa., Sept. 4.—Orville White, 27-year-old Overland, Mo., professional, held a four-stroke lead at the halfway mark of the fourth annual $5,000 Hershey Open tournament today as he added a sub-par 71 to his previous 68 for 139.

Al Espinosa, veteran Akron, Ohio, shotmaker, and Harry Cooper, runner-up to Tony Manero in the 1936 National Open, tied for second with 143.

Two other pros also smashed par over the 36-hole route, big Ed Dudley, of Philadelphia, and Charlie Schneider, of Wilmington, Del., who tied at 145.

Henry Picard, home club professional, added a 74 to his 72 of yesterday for 146, even par.

Sixty-five professionals who shot 155 or better qualified for the final 36 holes Saturday and Sunday. Six amateurs won positions.

Strung out behind at 147 were Leo Walper, Bethesda, Md.; Byron Nelson, Ridgewood, N. J., Clarence Clark, Bloomfield, N. J., and Sam Snead, Hot Springs, Va.

Dartmouth Sells Air Rights to Three Games

Hanover, N. H., Sept. 4 (AP).—Dartmouth's athletic association announced tonight it had sold the radio broadcasting rights for three games in the coming football season to an oil refining company.

The games are with Holy Cross, Brown and Norwich.

The action, emulating Yale University's move a few days ago to broadcast all Eli games under commercial sponsorship, came at the close of the first practice session of the football season.

Mrs. Fabyan Is Upset In Forest Hills Tennis

Mrs. Fabyan (left) congratulates Miss Bundy.

Dorothy Bundy, 20, Turns Trick in Play for U. S. Singles Titles; Hunt Only District Survivor; Other Favorites Win.

By the Associated Press.

Forest Hills, Sept. 4.—Dorothy May Sutton Bundy, fair-haired 18-year-old daughter of May Sutton who won the title in 1904, today eliminated Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Cambridge, Mass., third-ranking player in the country, from the national women's tennis singles championship, as most favorites squeaked through with close victories.

Fred Perry, of England, and Don Budge, of Oakland, Calif., favorites in the men's championship, both survived, but they are well aware tonight that they'll be playing for keeps from now on.

Gilbert A. Hunt, jr., 19-year-old Middle Atlantic champion, remained the sole Washington standard-bearer in the tournament, as Mary Cootes, District of Columbia women's champion, lost to Helen Fulton, of Winnetka, Ill., in the first round, 6—2, 9—7.

Hunt has his hands full in winning his second-round match from the capable Martin Buxby, of Miami, 10—8, 8—10, 7—5, 2—6, 6—4. Buxby, nineteenth ranking player of the country, wilted before the flashy volleying of the former No. 2 ranking intercollegiate player, in the final set. Hunt's forecourt attack, basis of his game from start to finish, wobbled considerably in the second and fourth sets but the youngster's daring shots were finding the lines consistently in the final chapter to carry him to victory.

Miss Cootes, daughter of a retired Army colonel in Alexandria, Va., turned in a surprisingly strong battle against Miss Fulton, No. 2 ranking women's player of the Western Association. In the second stanza it was anybody's set, each player being only a point or two from victory several times before the Illinois girl pulled out the match.

Frank M. Goeltz, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., frequent competitor in Washington tournaments, was eliminated in the second round by Eugene Smith, of Berkeley, Calif., 6—2, 6—1, 4—6, 6—3.

Hall Defeats Welsh.

J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J., who eliminated Barney Welsh, District of Columbia champion, in the outstanding match of the opening day's play, Thursday, in four hard sets, advanced to the third round with a victory over Robert Underwood, of Los Angeles, 4—6, 6—1, 6—2, 6—4.

Perry beat Ernest Sutter, the intercollegiate champion from New Orleans, 8—6, 6—2, 6—1, and Budge nudged Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami, 4—6, 6—2, 6—0, 6—1. Both Sutter and Mulloy put up a brave fight in the first set and played just well enough to summon the best Perry and Budge could give. Thereafter, however, there was nothing to either match.

In the last two sets, Perry simply flashed around the court, and for all of Sutter's shrewd anticipation, Perry was too mercilessly fast for him.

But the darling of the day was the flaxen-haired daughter of the famed May Sutton. A short, chunky little girl playing in her first major championship, she had supreme command of the situation from the middle of the first set on.

Mrs. Fabyan won the first three games of the match, then lost two, and won three more to lead by a set, but the youngster started the second set by winning the first game and from then on held the advantage. Hitting the ball with a clean, free stroke, she was especially effective with her forehand, which she drove past the erring Mrs. Fabyan time and again.

With the score tied at one set apiece, Miss Bundy took the first three games of the last set and then managed to keep winning on her service. The score of the entire match was 2—6, 6—3, 6—4.

Miss Bundy was modest about her victory, saying: "I think I was pretty lucky. I caught Sarah on an off-day. I doubt if I could do it again."

Patty Berg Wins Mason-Dixon Golf Title

Miss Guilfoil Is Routed, 12 and 10; Victor to Play Match in District.

By the Associated Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Sept. 4.—Scoring the most decisive victory ever recorded in the finals of this tournament, Patty Berg, youthful Minneapolis golf star, defeated Virginia Guilfoil, of Syracuse, N. Y., 12 up and 10 to play in the 36-hole final round to win the fourth annual Mason-Dixon women's golf tournament.

Displaying the same calm and deadly brand of play that catapulted her to fame last year, the freckled-face youngster gained a five-hole lead on the first nine and was leading, 7-up, at the end of the first 18.

Only once during the day did she get into serious trouble. Then her ball was unplayable on the thirteenth, and she took a penalty of two strokes, reaching the green in four. Miss Guilfoil took the hole.

Patty's putts rimmed the cup on several holes, but refused to drop. If they had canned she would have cut several strokes from women's par—as it was she had 77, two below the theoretical figures.

In the afternoon Miss Berg continued her same unerring game, capturing five of the eight holes played and halving the other three.

A surprise winner over Jean Bauer, Providence, R. I., the defending champion, in the semi-finals, Miss Guilfoil won only one hole today. It was the thirteenth, of the morning round, and the eventual winner had two penalty strokes for out-of-bound balls on that.

Leaves for Washington.

The young Minneapolis golfer left tonight with her father for Washington, where she is scheduled to play an exhibition on Labor Day. From there she will go to Vermont to enter the master's tournament, before testing her skill in the Women's National tournament.

Mrs. J. J. McCarthy, of Washington, won the second flight of the Mason-Dixon, defeating Mrs. E. M. Guidry, Westerly, R. I., 1-up in 19 holes, and Elizabeth Houghton, New Bedford, Mass., was victor in the defeated 16 of the championship flight, defeating Katherine McCloskey, 2 and 1.

Marion Brown, 17-year-old Washington, D. C. girl, and youngest player in the tournament, defeated Mrs. Embry Smith, of Washington, 1-up in the consolation eight of championship flight. Miss Brown was another of Miss Berg's victims, losing out in an early round.

Jack Dempsey, Best Man, Steals Bride After Ceremony

Bayonne, N. J., Sept. 4 (AP).—Jack Dempsey, former world's boxing champion, carried off the bride after a wedding here today, escaping with the husband in hot pursuit.

Dempsey had been one of the two witnesses at the marriage of George M. Perry, contact man for the New York Yankees, and Miss Legoti E. Hoover, former New York show girl. They were married by Acting Recorder Edward Griffin at the West Fifth street home of John Lee, assistant city clerk. Miss Evelyn Sutherland, of New York, was the second witness.

After the wedding party came from the house Dempsey seized the bride, put her in his car and sped off.

The startled Perry and Herman Cantor, a former police lieutenant, set off in Perry's automobile.

New York, Sept. 4 (AP).—George Perry, a baseball club contact man, whose wife of a few minutes was "kidnaped" by Jack Dempsey at Bayonne, N. J., in one of the former boxer's frequent practical jokes today, was reunited with his bride here tonight—and also with Jack.

Peacock Ties Yoder, Shea With 74

Webb Is Out as 16 Make Grade With Scores of 79 or Better.

Victor Establishes Self as Man to Beat for Crown Today.

By Dave Herman.

Volney Burnett, Indian Spring Country Club's fighting fireman, mastered an all-star field of 62 golfers yesterday at Manor Club's course, shooting a brilliant 71, 1 over par, to win the medal in the District Amateur Championship.

It was Burnett's greatest bid for honors in Washington's most important simon-pure tournament, and his 35-36 definitely proved that the former municipal golf ace is a man to be feared in match play which opens this morning.

Burnett, who recently qualified for the National Amateur Championship, won the medal with two strokes to spare, but the fact remains that he would have leveled par for the 18-hole route had he not missed his approach on the final hole and taken a five.

Roger Peacock, 24-year-old Congressional luminary, defending title-holder, wound up in a triple tie for second place with Levi Yoder, of Kenwood, Middle Atlantic champion, and 17-year-old Billy Shea, of Congressional, each scoring a 74.

Peacock Is Off Form.

Shea, out in 35, even par, set the afternoon pace until Peacock came along to tie him.

Then followed Burnett with his 71, and Yoder created the three-way deadlock for the runner-up post late in the evening.

Peacock was not the Peacock who shot that 140 at Columbia in the amateur trials. His approaches were none too accurate. Going out in 38, 3 over par, Peacock had to play steady golf on that incoming nine for his 36. On the eighteenth he fired a four-iron second 5 inches past the pin for a birdie 3, almost holing out for an eagle. It was his greatest shot of the day.

Scores of 79 qualified for the championship flight of 16. The only real casualty was Tommy Webb, of Washington Golf and Country Club, National Amateur qualifier, who reported no card after a ragged first nine journey. M. Parker Nolan, of Congressional, and Bernie Hallock, of Kenwood, also failed to make the grade.

Brownell Gets a 77.

Tommy Bones, of Manor, left-handed ace, scored a 75, missing a 3-footer on the last hole.

Manor's pride and joy, Harry Pitt, former District champion, finishing with a 6, was an easy qualifier with 38—38—76.

The little chap who created such a furore in the amateur trials at Columbia, Bobby Brownell, District junior champion, scored a 77, after underclubbing at least six of his shots.

Billy Dettweiler, Congressional boy star, was around in 78. Billy staged a spirited rally after turning in 42, seven over par. Manor is Billy's one time home course.

Has Four Birdies.

Burnett had four birdies during the day, and really played spectacular golf. He had threes on the fifth and sixth, and birdies on the twelfth and fifteenth. Burnett went out in 35. On the twelfth, he sank a 25-footer for a three.

One of the features of today's first-round matches will be the bat-

Canzoneri Fights McLarnin Oct. 3

By Jack Cuddy.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

New York, Sept. 4.—Lou Ambers, the hungry fighter, who woke up today to find himself lightweight champion of the world, bustled about the shopping district followed by a bevy of brothers and sisters—buying new outfits for all, while the muffin-faced little former champ, Tony Canzoneri, completed arrangements for a come-back brawl with Irish Jimmy McLarnin.

Luigi D'Ambrosio, known to the ring as Lou Ambers, elated to distraction by the feel of the 135-pound crown upon his light-brown locks, marched through the smart shops, followed by Angelo, Joey and Tommy—and Anna, Carmella and Jennie.

And the brand new lightweight king said to the other D'Ambrosio children "buy some clothes for yourselves—clothes that'll look okay for kids whose brother is the champ. And I'm buyin' three suits myself."

So the brood of the widowed Louisia D'Ambrosio, of Herkimer, N. Y., bought clothes—plenty of clothes—swanky clothes, befitting the brothers and sisters of a champ—a champ who only last night had beaten one of the grandest fighting men the ring ever knew, the great Tony Canzoneri.

The D'Ambrosio sextet did not see their brother's triumph last night. But they listened in on the radio. And they didn't sleep last night because they were so happy. And they grabbed the first train to New York this morning.

Mother Louisa did not come to New York—but she wasn't worried. She had heard her favorite son yell joyously into the ringside microphone, "Hello, ma! I won! I won the champeeenship! Ain't America grand?" And as soon as Lou had changed from ring togs to civvies, she heard his voice on the phone from Jack Dempsey's restaurant assuring her that "I'm okay, ma. Didn't get hurt a bit. Goin' right to bed now, and to communion in the morning."

Meanwhile, rotund Al "Veskit" Weill, the heroic manager who had sunk himself and his family into debt while concentrating on jockeying the previously unfortunate "Herkimer hurricane" into the title, waddled about punch promenade receiving and passing judgment upon a flock of offers for the new champ's services—offers that came from as far as the Transvaal in South Africa.

While the D'Ambrosios were creating consternation in the downtown shopping district, former Champion Canzoneri was nursing his cuts and bruises at a downtown hotel, attended by his bride of three months, the former show girl Rita Roy. And Manager Sammy Goldman was in Tony's suite most of the day.

There was no talk of retirement. Instead battle plans were mapped out for a march back to the 135-pound throne. Goldman announced late this afternoon:

"We have just closed for Tony's come-back fight. He will meet Jimmy McLarnin in a return 10-rounder at the Garden on October 3. I just signed up with Jimmy Johnston of the Garden for the bout. McLarnin's manager, Pop Foster, agreed to the bout yesterday by telephone—before Tony fought Ambers—whether Tony won lost or drew with Ambers. No, he won't take any tune-up bouts before then."

At the Garden, Johnston somewhat evasively confirmed that the bout had been closed.

Miss Symphony Takes Marlboro Feature by Neck After Battle

Gay Bride 2d In a 3-Nose Finish

Winner Returns $25; Running Water Third, Double Is $59.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Marlboro, Md., Sept. 4.—Miss Symphony made it two victories in three trys here today, withstanding a gruelling stretch struggle to win the Marlboro Hotel Purse, feature race of a day that lured some 5,000 customers to this half-mile track. Expertly handled by young Jockey Leon Garrett, Miss Symphony came up in the concluding strides to take a neck decision in front of a three-nose finish for second money. The judges called the others in this order: Gay Bride, Running Water and Doeskin.

Miss Symphony, Owner H. M. Simpson's fourth winner in the five times his colors have gone postward, was thought to be racing "over her head" and her scattered backers collected $25.60, the second largest mutuel of the meeting.

It was a race worthy of the chief position on the program. Doeskin, ridden by Jockey Palumbo and installed the favorite, did the expected by going to the front at once and her rooters were all ready to pocket the profits. However, she tired approaching the wire and along came Miss Symphony and the others. There was no doubt that Miss Symphony was the winner, but it looked as if three horses were in a dead heat for second money.

The daily double brought a return of $59.80 to those who held the 7 and 6 tickets. After Timber Lady won the first race, the "possibilities" ranged from $18.70 on combinations ending on Flying Carpet to $2,813.40 on Mabel Beyond. Dark Spinet went postward without a double ticket sold on her.

Timber Lady won her second race in a row by taking the opening dash for juveniles under the excellent handling of Jockey Leon Garrett. Iuka was beaten five lengths with Little Whisk third, a like distance away. There was little in the way of a contest involved. Garrett hustled Timber Lady away and held sway throughout. Justa Pilgrim, the odds-on favorite, faltered after chasing the pace-setter. The winner paid $7.30.

Jockey Sammy Palumbo brought the favored Mazyniata home in the second race to the tune of a $4.10 mutuel. The Mayne mare was challenged throughout by King Ladislaus, a 94-1 shot, and barely missed losing the decision by bearing out in the stretch. Westacton was third in the field of eight.

Tell It, at a $9.30 mutuel, won the third race from the heavily played Flying Carpet by a length and a half. The two fought it out from the beginning with Tell It packing the closing punch under Jockey Tryon's good handling. Follow On was third most of the way and took the show money.

Justa Flight came out of the pack at the stretch turn to win the fourth race from Miss Tiptoe, a Bond horse with Dixie Bee third. Take Off set the early pace but faltered out of it at the final bend. Miss Tiptoe came through on the rail and Justa Flight went to the middle of the track. The Flying Ebony gelding, under J. Hernandez's whip went on to win going away. Dixie Bee, probably was much the best but was ridden all over the county. The winner paid $9.40.

Trylubria given an intelligent ride by Apprentice Jockey E. Scott, won the sixth race at an $8.60 mutuel. He refused to be lured into using up his horse and steadied the gelding back of the leaders. When he finally asked for speed he got it and galloped Trylubria home by eight lengths.

Bay Wrack defeated Porphyry a half length to take the final event at a $5.10 mutuel.

Post League Officials Finish Plans for Week-Day Title Series

Opening Tilt Scheduled Tuesday

Miller Draws Bye; Three Players Ineligible for the Series.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Everything is all set but the weather for the city week-day championships of the Post Sandlot Association. As the result of a spirited meeting in The Post auditorium of representatives of the 11 week-day leagues, final arrangements were completed to assure commencement of the series, Tuesday, September 8.

All games will be played on the South Ellipse at 4:30 p. m. The champions of the Industrial League, Miller Furniture, drew a bye for the first round. The remainder of the schedule for the first round is as follows:

Tuesday, September 8—Accounts and Deposits (Sports Center Government League) vs. National Savings & Trust Co. (Bankers League).

Wednesday, September 9—Public Works Administration (Departmental League) vs. Resettlement Greenbelts (Federal "A" League).

Thursday, September 10—Naval Air Station (Army and Navy League) vs. Mount Vernon M. E. (Washington Church League).

Friday, September 11—Procurement Division (Federal "AA" League) vs. Potomac Electric Power Co. (National Capital League).

Monday, September 14—Bureau of Investigation (U. S. Government League) vs. The Hecht Co. (Department Store League).

The clubs are playing for the championship won last year by the NRA team of the United States Government League. It will take two defeats to eliminate a club. Second round matches will take winners against winners and losers against losers.

Officials Present.

Officials present were: Mike Sklar, president of the Sports Center Government League; Manager Buddy Fox, of National Savings; Secretary George P. Pollock of the Bankers League; President Vic Gauzza of the Departmental, Federal "A" and Federal "AA" Leagues; Lieut. L. L. Koepke of the Army and Navy League; President Forrest Burgess of the Washington Church League; President Claude E. Wessells of the National Capital League; S. J. Tracy and Manager Sheedy of the Bureau of Investigation; Secretary J. W. Leverton of the U. S. Government League; President Mike Gass of the Department Store League; Manager Miller of Miller Furniture and Secretary E. W. Flester of the Industrial League.

The meeting was marked by considerable discussion concerning eligibility of certain players, namely Arnold (Lefty) Heft, claimed by Miller Furniture and The Hecht Co.; Michael Hunt, Conrad Royer and Frank Baroni, claimed by National Savings; William Moore, claimed by Procurement Division, and Dean Couper, claimed by the Resettlement Greenbelts.

Three Are Ineligible.

Hunt, Royer and Baroni were voted ineligible because they joined the National Savings team from another club in the same league. Moore and Couper were also voted ineligible, but the team Heft was to play with was left for the managers to decide, with Heft finally being scratched from the Hecht roster.

All eligibility lists were read and attested to, either by managers of the teams to play or president of the league the team is to represent. A team using players other than those listed below automatically forfeits every game in which the ineligible player has participated and is immediately ejected from the series.

Virginia Schools Ban Football Broadcasts

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 4.—Athletic directors of Virginia members of the Southern Conference voted down a proposal to broadcast football games in the State this fall and modified the grid admission price scale at an executive session here today.

By a margin of 4-2, representatives of the six institutions decided that all contests engaged in within the State should be withheld from the air. An exception was made in the case of the Virginia-Hampden Sydney games, for which arrangements have already been made for broadcasting.

Captain Norton G. Pritchett, University of Virginia athletic director, who acted as chairman of the session, said that it was agreed before the vote was taken that all institutions would abide by the decision of the majority.

Virginia and Washington and Lee votes were made in favor of broadcasting of football games, while dissenting ballots were cast by William and Mary, V. M. I., Richmond and Virginia Tech.

The athletic directors also amended the $2 uniform reserve seat fee set at a meeting last spring in Lexington to provide that at least 6,000 seats must be so reserved and lower prices may be charged for the remaining seats.

School children will pay $1 for the reserved seats. The new plan will make little change at the schools where the seating capacity of the stadiums allow few more seats than the 6,000 which must be reserved at $2 each. No minimum was set for the unreserved seats.

Prior to the final vote on the broadcasting problem, two other proposals were defeated. The first provided for the broadcasting of one outstanding game each Saturday, while the other would allow each institution to make its own individual broadcasting arrangements. The first proposal went down by 4-2, and the latter by 5-1.

Southern Conference regulations provide that games may be broadcast only by mutual agreement between two opposing teams.

Capt. Pritchett said he favored broadcasting because "it is a new contact with the alumni, who can get a better slant on football and feel a personal contact with the school," and it is "a new means of arousing State-wide interest in football."

Old Dominion Club, Potomac Crews Vie

Special Dispatch to The Post

Alexandria, Va., Sept. 4.—Enthused over their showing in an earlier meet despite the fact they were defeated in every shell event, Old Dominion Boat Club oarsmen have scheduled a return regatta with the Potomac Boat Club for Sunday, September 13, at the Potomac Club, it was announced today.

Singles, doubles, gig, quad, and eight, as well as a number of special canoe events will comprise the program.

Only ten men will be carried by the St. Mary's Celtics on Sunday, when they leave for two games with the fast Craddock A. C. in Portsmouth. The locals must gain at least an even break with the Tidewater champions to stay in the race.

Edith Clarke, Tennis Star, Injured

Breaks Ankle in Practice; Unable to Defend Title at Army and Navy.

Young Edith Clarke, one of the leading women players of Washington, broke her ankle yesterday in a match at the Army and Navy Club and will be unable to defend her championship in the club's annual Invitation Tournament starting today. Mrs. Stanley R. Robinson, who defeated Miss Clarke in the finals of the West Virginia State and the City of Washington tournaments, is seeded No. 1.

Miss Clarke received her injury in a practice match with Edward Becker, a club player. She made an effort to return a sharply angled service, and, in attempting to turn and cover the court, fractured a bone in her foot. She will be off her feet indefinitely. Miss Clarke won the Old Dominion championship in Richmond this year.

Despite the absence of the 1935 champion, the tournament has drawn a large field. Sara Moore, Public Parks champion, is seeded No. 2; Mrs. Barry Wood, No. 3, and Mrs. Dorette Miller, No. 4. It is possible that Mary Cootes, who was eliminated in the National Singles at Forest Hills yesterday, will return and play in the tournament.

The finals will be played on Labor Day, necessitating two matches today.

Hanna, D.C. Trainer, Suspended For Beating Horse at Marlboro

Marlboro, Md., Sept. 4.—Charged with abusing the horse, Luculent, in the paddock before the running of today's sixth race, R. L. (Peg) Hanna, Washington, D. C. horseman, was suspended at a meeting of the stewards of the Southern Maryland Agricultural Fair Association. Hanna's case was referred to the Maryland racing commission.

Hanna is alleged to have beaten the 5-year-old gelding across the flanks with a chain just before Jockey Tryon was boosted into the saddle. According to one local official, Hanna admitted striking the horse "once."

As far as can be learned this is the first time a trainer in Maryland has been suspended for beating a horse in the paddock. However, the practice of "waking up" sluggish-breaking horses by punishing them in the stable before bringing them to the paddock once was common among unscrupulous horsemen.

Luculent broke seventh today, took the lead after six furlongs, but quit badly entering the stretch and was fourth at the finish, beaten 16 lengths. The Prince Pal-Maid of India gelding was a 14-1 shot.

Another Washingtonian was disciplined during the day. Eddie Smith, popular jockey, was suspended for the meeting and his case referred to the commission for rough riding on Doll Up in the fourth race.

New Barabas Ball Carrier For G. U.

Brother of Grid Stars Held Promising; Frank Is Shifted to Back.

The good Eye-talian name of Barabas, synonymous with high-stepping and hard-hitting football ball carriers, may appear again in the backfield of Georgetown's line-up this autumn, and unless Coach Jack Hagerty is dead wrong the latest of the Barabas line will be as good as his immediate predecessors.

The nominee is Tony Barabas, tall, slim and speedy brother of Steve, who cavorted with the Hoyas in 1927, '28 and '29, and Al, who scored the winning touchdown for Columbia in the Rose Bowl game with Stanford of 1934. Tony has a lot of shoe to fill to live up to his name, but Hagerty thinks the boy eventually will be better than either of his brothers.

Converted Into Backs.

Tony is one of two players Hagerty has decided to convert from linemen into backs to bolster the ball-carrying department. The other is Joe Frank, a husky tackle, who will be made over into a blocking back. Frank is husgy, fast and loves to mix it. He might not be the world's greatest carrier, but his coach believes he will be one of the best blockers around town.

Young Barabas was an end last year, but did not play regularly because Al Snyder and Dave Noonan happened to be around, and his pass-catching talent was wholly wasted. Georgetown needs capable receivers, especially of the type who are dangerous in a broken field and who can get away after taking a throw. Barabas can do that and more. He can back up a line and is a veritable fence against enemy passes.

Red Donahue was out of action yesterday because of an attack of hives, but is expected back in a couple of days. Al Vaccaro, Mike Petroskey and Ed Bodine are still A. W. O. L., but are expected Monday. Atchison.

Templeton 4, Greentree to Vie for Title

Right to Represent U. S. in Argentine Series Also at Stake.

By the United Press.

Meadowbrook, N. Y., Sept. 4.—Greentree and Templeton, two of the strongest polo teams ever assembled, clash on famed International Field tomorrow for the double prize of the United States open title and the honor of becoming America's "big four" for the international series against the gaucho riders of Argentina.

Templeton, which won the national championship in 1931 and 1934, is favored slightly.

Should the 32-goal Templeton four triumph, it will bring to three of its players their second international assignment of the year.

Earlier this summer, Winston Guest, Stewart Iglehart and Michael Phipps teamed with Eric Pedley to retain the Westchester Cup for the United States by defeating England's best, three games to nothing, in London.

The game, bringing together two well-mounted, high-scoring outfits, is certain to develop into a real brawl—perhaps the closest final ever sent in the 23-year history of the open.

For John Hay (Jock) Whitney, Greentree back, tomorrow's battle will mean more than to any of the other seven players. Because the international squad for the cup of the Americas series, beginning September 19, is being determined on the basis of team instead of individual play, Whitney finally has a chance to realize a life's ambition.

Guyon Youth Set To Blaze Career afternoon down on the Ellipse performing for the Heurich Brewers.

"Little" Joe, 181 pounds and over 6 feet tall, is ready for college but doesn't know where he will enroll at the moment. Uncle Charley and Papa Joe think it best for him to remain in the East. Little Joe graduated from St. Xavier's High School, Louisville, where he starred as a back in football, basketball and baseball. Like his dad, he prefers the gridiron, although he's no slouch at third base on the ball team and a better-than-average courtman. He's fast, too, although denied the privilege of being under a good coach thus far. Xavier was not strong for track and had no organized team.

The boy has traveled with his father all of his 18 years, starting as a trouper before weaned. If he doesn't go to college this year it will be all right with him, Uncle Charley and Papa Joe.

"Pshaw, Indians aren't any good anyway until they have a little age in their bones. Why, just look at us," said Uncle Charley and Papa Joe.

Montgomery League To Have Busy Week-end

A big holiday week-end has been scheduled for the Montgomery County League of The Post Sandlot Association, with Rockville making its bid for the two victories which will virtually clinch the championship of the second half. Rockville collides with the Takoma Tigers in a double-header tomorrow.

On Labor Day, Colesville will visit Gaithersburg for a tussle with the first-half champions. A meeting of the league will be held Tuesday at 8 p. m. in the Rockville Firehouse.

Thomas Is Lost To Maryland Grid Team

Ankle Injury to Keep Him Off Squad; Scrimmage Scheduled Today.

The ill fortune that dogged "Little Knocky" Thomas' path last year and struck him from the University of Maryland's football roster apparently still hovers over him, for the promising Terp halfback yesterday heard that he will not be able to play football again this season.

Last year it was an appendectomy that felled Thomas, and this time it is an ailing ankle which was injured early in the baseball season. "Knocky" broke the ankle sliding into home plate in a game with Cornell at Ithaca in May. After spending two months on crutches he finally recovered sufficiently to resume his place behind the plate for a local baseball team.

Until recently it was believed that he would be able to play football, but the ankle has been giving him trouble of late, and yesterday the team physician decided to forestall possible serious injury by forbidding him to play this season. While "Knockey" fitted in well with Coach Dobson's schemes, his loss will not be a crushing blow to the Terps. It may be a blessing in disguise, for he will still have three years of competition left when Guckeyson, Ellinger, et al., have graduated.

Of course, there's that little matter of room, board and tuition, to say nothing of clothes, spending money and incidental financial items to be considered during that period. But that's Maryland's worry.

Light scrimmage is on the books today for the Terps. Dobson has divided his men into three groups with utter disregard for seniority, ability or anything else, and today will turn them loose on one another for a brief period. This method of mixing men indiscriminately is not only good for the squad's morale, Dobson has found, but also serves to bring to light talent which otherwise might be lost down among the scrubs.

Stores Plan Bowling League for Season

That the Department Stores Bowling League will function this season was assured at the first called meeting of the season Thursday night. Seven local department stores were represented and officers for the approaching season were elected.

Woodward & Lothrop, Lansburgh & Bro., the Hecht Co., S. Kanns Sons Co., Guy-Curran & Co., Palais Royal, and Raleigh Haberdashers were the establishments who promised to enter teams in the competition, and the following officers were elected: A. K. Staley, president; Stanley Beall, vice president; Irwin Simon, secretary-scorer, and Vic Riston, treasurer.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

The luckiest or the most astute horse player in Washington is the downtown office worker who ventured a sawbuck on a two-horse win parlay at Narragansett the other day.

The fellow was excusably a-flutter when the first horse in his combination, Scotch Gold, won at sizeable odds and thus sent the entire pot riding on his choice in the seventh race, Cohort Miss.

POVICH.

But expectancy gave way to misgivings when he noted that Bill Bennings, his favorite handicapper, had picked a horse named Diverting to win the race in which Cohort Miss was entered. An inveterate follower of Bennings, he began to fear for the success of his parlay that was riding on Cohort Miss.

Mulling the possibilities, he decided upon a plan of action. Checking the form chart and realizing that Diverting Miss was, indeed, a likelier winner than his Cohort Miss, he gambled on a new wager. To his bookmaker he phoned a $10-win bet on Diverting as a "saver."

But by this time the suspense was too great. Down to his bookie's he hurried to listen to the telephonic description.

Leading a tremulous ear to the broadcast he heard it called a stretch duel between Cohort Miss and Diverting as they neared the wire. And then came the announcement that it was a "photo finish." The judges could not separate the pair. They never did. It was a dead heat between Cohort Miss and Diverting and the guy cashed all of his bets.

My favorite horse player is Pete Marshall who works the telegraph wire upstairs, who knows horse flesh to the dismay of the bookmakers, who has been following the horses since the siege of Troy, and who has been accused of saddling Paul Revere's steed that April day in '75.

Mr. Marshall can also hit any regulation-size cuspidor at 20 paces, but that is beside the point. The point is that all horse players are susceptible to the gnawing doubts of what might happen.

We were both on the rail at Laurel one afternoon, Mr. Marshall and myself, studying our programs with a view toward risking a few bobs on the next gallop when on a mere hunch I announced I had discovered the sure winner. Believe me, the name of the steed I had picked is on the tip of my tongue.

Anyway, Mr. Marshall spat viciously and laughed me down. Inferring that I was plumb crazy, he bellowed: "Why, you squirt, do you want to throw your dough away. There ain't but one hoss in this race. That's Pilgrim. Go get yourself a bet on Pilgrim before I boot ya through the rail."

I was mad clear through. But Pete was and still is a guy of 260 pounds who could slap down a fire plug with his open hand, so I just stayed mad.

"Oh yeah?" was my snappy comeback. "Well, just don't forget I gave ya the winner," I told him, and left to make my bet.

Pete and I were back there at the rail when the barrier went up. It was never more than a one-horse race—Pilgrim from flag fall to finish.

"Yee-ow!" exclaimed Povich, brandishing a fistful of tickets. And then I noticed an unmistakable glumness on the countenance of Mr. Marshall who was ruefully tearing up a stack of pasteboards. Darned if he hadn't talked me on to his winner and I had talked him off it.

In Short—

Speaking of dead heats, the Caulfied, Australia, track turned up one for the books on March 17, 1934 . . . when two horses in a hurdle race finished first in a dead heat . . . and the next two horses dead heated for third and fourth money in the same race . . . but at Newmarket, England, in 1855, four horses in a five-horse field finished in a dead heat . . . but the dead-heat story to end all dead-heat stories is that of a trotting race in Dublin, Ireland, in 1918 . . . when Terry and Drogheda finished in a dead heat . . . in a run-off, they dead heated again . . . and in a second run-off (you guessed it) the same thing happened . . . the owners then split the purse . . . Omar Khayyam is always referred to as the only foreign horse ever to win the Kentucky Derby . . . but Cavalcade, the Derby winner in 1934, was conceived in England before being foaled in America.

Corn Shorts Bid Up Price 5½c a Bushel

September Climbs to $1.11½, Sharpest Advance in 3 Years.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 4.—Frenzied buying of September corn that shot up the price 5½ cents to $1.11½ a bushel, the sharpest advance scored by any grain future since the wild bull market of July, 1933, gave all grains a strong tone today.

Pit brokers credited "shorts" with frantic buying of the September corn contract on which delivery must be made this month. Gossip of the possibility of a "squeeze" developing in corn at the end of the month because of the small supply available for delivery on the contracts circulated in the corn pit. Other corn deliveries advanced about 3 cents while wheat, oats, rye and barley gained more than a cent.

George A. Kelly, vice president, said: "The heaviest winter tourist movement since the pre-depression era, plus the general revival of travel due to improved business conditions, materially stimulated gross revenues for the first seven months of 1936."

The Market

Stocks Close Firm in More Active Trading; Bond Market Strong; Corn Soars.

New York, Sept. 4.—Stocks finished the full day week with a firm tone, important gains in a few stocks, and a lack of excitement over most fronts. Sales volume was a little higher at more than 1,000,000 shares. Best prices for most issues were reached in the last hour's covering operations among traders expecting to be absent until Tuesday.

Preparations for the holiday, considered a factor this week in keeping down activity in security markets and therefore having a tendency to depress prices, failed to hurt prices today. Perhaps short covering had something to do with stocks, but after a draggy morning the market hardened. Bonds also continued strong and commodities drove upward. Corn in particular was heavily bought, the September futures rising 4⅞ cents to 111 cents a bushel. September wheat closed 1¼ cents higher at 111¼ cents a bushel.

The main body of stocks showed only fractional changes, in spite of the appearance of energy in a few spots. About two dozen issues, including several preferred stocks, stood out with sizable gains. American Telephone was bid up 3 points. Coca-Cola reached its best price on record with a 3-point rise. Western Union was a heavy speculative favorite and Write Aero easily influenced, climbed swiftly.

Other common stocks able to advance 1 to 4 points were Douglas, Ward Baking, Westinghouse, du Pont, American Can, Commercial Credit, Commercial Investment Trust and Anchor Cap. Preferred shares that attracted attention included Santa Fe, Certain-teed, Commercial Credit, Fuller, Wheeling Steel, Barker Bros., Cuban, American and Worthington.

Autumn Worries.

So far as Wall Street is concerned, Labor Day marks the turning point between the summer and the autumn seasons. In business the change is usually abrupt, and the same thing is true of speculation. During the stagnant dog days attention of those idling about the summer resorts is turned from time to time to a survey of autumn prospects. Always the hope rises that the cooler season, with the opening of the schools, the spending that accompanies the fairs and carnivals of the fall, the foreign buying of our raw materials, the harvesting of the crops and the preparation for winter changes will give business a fillip.

Occasionally no seasonal upturn takes place, and that was the case in 1934, largely because of the devastating drought. This summer, thanks partly to the bonus and partly to the increasing momentum of all-round recovery, the usual summer slack did not appear. Business continued on a higher level than it had reached in the spring, or in the previous autumn. Now some doubts are creeping in as to whether much expansion will come later this month and next month.

Depleted purchasing power on the Western farms because of another drought is one reason for worry. Another is the natural anxiety that follows premature prosperity. It will be recalled that some observers had grave doubts at the end of last year whether the coming spring would show much revival, because the closing months of 1935 had been so unusually active. Two arguments are offered to calm the pessimists. One is that, in spite of the election uncertainty, Government spending is going to increase, even to the extent of offsetting for a while the effect of the drought. Another is that the pan is now so hot that the bacon will fry in its own juice for several months, i. e., recovery generates recovery.

Social Security.

Foreign exchanges were marked by fresh weakness in francs. The further the French Government goes along the "reflationary" road the more certain currency devaluation becomes. Apparently that is recognized fully in official circles, for the most recent step taken with regard to forced repatriation of French capital that has fled the anticipated currency devaluation, and the Socialist government as well, suggests early action to crack down.

The most that Frenchmen who have sent their money out of the country can expect is that, in the event of devaluation, all the supposed profit that they might get will be taxed away from them. However, other penalties must be hinted at, else the French Government would not anticipate a return of the emigrated funds. Such a program may be good for the country, but it is by no means reassuring to the market for francs to know that their work value is a highly artificial one and is likely to collapse at any time. When a country becomes unsafe for property, it usually is unsafe for people, as the Russian and Spanish experience shows.

Odd Lots.

Seldom has the market in recent years seen such a lovely synchronization of news releases and ticket tape activity as that of yesterday and the day before in a low-priced motor stock. However, the week chosen for the demonstration seems to have been a poor one, for it caught the speculative community with a hangover from the dog days. In spite of obvious efforts to shove the stock ahead nobody seemed to grow excited over the affair . . . Markets have changed so little that description of one day's movements is applicable to that of another. A week and a half ago, for instance, it was said here that the markets "rolled between the wind and the tide," which carried with it the suggestion of an anchorage. Apparently the stock market is still at the old moorings, under the same conditions of weather and tide, for a market letter reported that yesterday's market "rolled between wind and tide in today's trading." . . . Another little election reminder: Silver King Coalition Mines (silver) increased the dividend 50 per cent. The stock turned strong two or three days ago on buying by those with the proper hunch.

Foreign Deposits.

For some weeks certain foreign central banks have been accumulating balances here, the increase in recent weeks having been about $40,000,000. The reserve bank statement discloses a drop of about $38,000,000 in these deposits in the week ended Wednesday. One of transactions which pulled down balances of foreign banks was easy to identify; it was payment for the British investments of Utilities Power & Light Corporation which were sold in a recent deal for a price said to be around $25,000,000 cash. The other transaction was not so easy to trace, but was believed to be connected with a foreign bond redemption operation.

Francs.

When the French minister of finance recently extended to September 7 the date at which French holders of foreign balances must report on them, he said there would be considerable repatriation of French money by them. Circumstances seem now to promise an exodus rather than an influx. The franc was quite weak today at 6.58 5-16, a level at which many millions of dollars in gold could be shipped here from Paris at a profit, but the drop in the rate came almost too late in the day, in relation to Paris time, to suggest any unusually large consignments. The victories lately gained by the Spanish rebel armies augur no special good to the radical government of France, which may have backed the wrong horse. Week-end pressure was another factor which helped to push francs down.

Total Revenue Loadings in Week of August 29 Was 753,742 Cars.

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended August 29 totaled 753,742 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was an increase of 72,894 cars or 10.7 per cent compared with the corresponding week in 1935, and an increase of 106,211 cars or 16.4 per cent above the corresponding week in 1934. Labor and Price Problems Loom In Industry

Effect Is to Offset Run of Favorable Trade Developments.

New York, Sept. 4.—Problems of price and labor pushed to the center of the business stage this week, overshadowing the general run of favorable developments. Business Week will say tomorrow. Steel executives tabled debate on wage increases in the hope of putting off a decision on prices that might disturb the present excellent flow of orders. The wool industry took note of the move of the textile union to Lawrence, Mass., signifying intention to organize that center. And September 5 marked the last day of grace for industrial unionists to return to the fold of the craft-minded American Federation of Labor.

Cotton markets await the next report of the cotton crop (due after Labor Day) with considerable anticipation, hoping it will confirm their belief of extensive damage since the August report and therefore bolster the price structure. Carpet manufacturers finally came through with a modest price increase on rugs, but woolen goods markets were disturbed by price cuts announced on some spring lines.

In the midst of price increases, the voluntary rate cut on long-distance telephone calls by American Telephone & Telegraph Co. comes as a welcome offsetting move. Reduction in the public's phone bill of more than $7,000,000 annually is expected. The cut is the seventh over a period of ten years.

Farmers' Cash.

Because the drought reduced feed supplies and boosted prices, farmers rushed their products to market in heavy volume in the last two months. The best July since 1929 lined farmers' pockets with $711,000,000 of cash, plus $24,000,000 of farm benefits.

Public purchasing power is being expanded in other directions this fall, too. The effect of the undistributed-earnings tax on dividend distributions was plainly apparent in last month's pay-off. Some $334,648,487 was distributed to shareholders in August by 721 corporations, making it high month of the year and the biggest August since 1931. Ninety-seven extras and 72 increases helped swell the total.

Steel mills aren't so dependent on Detroit for business these days. Ship-builders have purchased more tonnage in the first eight months of this year than in any full year since 1930. The Navy Department added to this tonnage recently by awarding six destroyers and three submarines to private yards plus four destroyers and two submarines to its own yards.

Theaters Plan Increase in Ads To Newspapers

Press Still Most Important Medium, Says Loew National Executive.

New York, Sept. 4.—At a meeting of motion picture advertising executives plans were discussed for advertising and promotion of circuit theaters for the new movie season now being launched.

Discussing plans of the Loew Theater circuit, which operates the Capitol, Palace and Columbia theaters in Washington, D. C., National Advertising Director Oscar A. Doob revealed that several hundred Loew theaters contemplate healthy increases in newspaper advertising space.

"Despite the development of other forms of advertising the daily newspaper still remains the most important and most productive form of advertising for motion pictures," said Doob. "During the late depression the Loew theaters trimmed their advertising budgets only moderately, if at all.

Big Campaign Coming.

"Our theaters have always done everything possible to encourage the use of newspapers by producers of pictures. During the coming season indications are that producer-advertising of their productions will be heavier than ever before. Virtually all of the producers with whom Loew Theaters do business have announced huge appropriations for national newspaper advertising in co-operation with local theaters.

"One of the things that has tended to increase the value of newspaper advertising to motion-picture theaters is the continued increase in the quantity and quality of movie news on the movie pages.

"Whereas some years ago few newspapers had carefully edited movie pages, today more than 99 per cent of the daily papers on the Loew circuit have fine, intelligently edited movie pages which publishers consider important reader-interest assets to their papers. The millions of movie fans have come to look to their daily paper for the up-to-the minute movie news.

Through the co-operation of Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, Loew's Theaters are planning unusually elaborate newspaper campaigns for the new season. Washington has been the first city in the country to benefit by this new season's campaign with the one recently conducted on the world premiere of "Gorgeous Hussy" at Loew's Palace.

Papers Step Out.

A significant trend in the growing importance of movie news, Mr. Doob says, is found in the fact that during the last year and a half a half-dozen of the country's most important and most conservative newspapers have completely changed their attitude toward movies. Whereas they gave little and reluctant attention to the movies in the past, they now have complete pages and in some instances have actually sent skilled writers to Hollywood as special correspondents, using this special material as the basis for circulation promotion campaigns.

Mr. Doob was particularly effusive in his praise for the splendid co-operation given by the Washington papers, as well as for the high excellence of the movie pages conducted here.

He also revealed that formidable national campaigns are being prepared on "The Garden of Allah," "Dodsworth," "The General Died at Dawn," "Born to Dance," "The Great Ziegfeld," "Libeled Lady," and many other important pictures.

House Office Worker Held in Theft Series

A man described by police as a temporary employe of the House Office Building was arrested yesterday in connection with a series of recent thefts from offices of Representatives.

He was captured, investigators said, while attempting to drop a typewriter from an open first-floor window. With the man's arrest, police believed they have solved a number of typewriter and office equipment thefts during the past several weeks. The man is held for investigation.

Experts Argue New Deal Plan Of Farm Power

Morgan, of TVA, and Reed, of Utility, to Air Views at Conference Here.

Tactics of privately owned utilities in taking only the cream of the rural electrification markets may "result in preventing for all time the successful electrification of rural America," Harcourt A. Morgan, of the Tennessee Valley Authority, argued in a paper released yesterday.

The paper, prepared for the world power conference to be opened here Monday, was opposed by one written by Hudson W. Reed, of the United Gas Improvement Co.

In sharp contrast with Morgan's view, the utility spokesman said the "farmers will be the losers, as formerly, only this time the Government will help them carry the burden," in his attack on the New Deal's plan to promote farm-owned co-operative power lines.

"Already Electrified."

Reed said:

"Most of the farms where electrification is of economic value already have been electrified."

Morgan replied:

"In a country where nearly 6,000,000 farm homes are without electricity there has been no rural electrification experience."

Reed argued that the REA was prepared without consulting the farmer.

Morgan, declaring that co-operatives had survived in the past, said that "with expert assistance, the newer co-operatives will achieve reasonably good management and efficiency in operation the same as demanded by business, including operation of a farm."

Would Consider the Whole.

He contended that "since rural electrification will aid in achieving important benefits, it becomes desirable to look beyond the immediate balance sheet of an individual project and consider the larger balance sheet of rural well-being for the Nation as a whole."

Reed reported that the utilities industry, asked to co-operate with the REA, submitted a plan for a $238,249,000 development, rejected by Morris L. Cooke, REA administrator and chairman of the executive committee for the conference.

Reed concluded with a report that the utility industry, through private financing, built new lines in 1935 to serve more than 151,000 rural customers.

In the meantime, plans went ahead for the entertainment of the 3,000 scientists, engineers, economists, financiers and diplomtas from 52 countries who will throng through Washington for a week beginning Monday.

Nikita Balieff Dies; Famous for Dialect In N. Y. Vaudeville

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 4.—Death came to Nikita Balieff, the Russian impresario, today, silencing one of the funniest and most popular dialects in New York. He was 59.

Like many another genius of the footlights, the creator of the Chauve-Souris Vaudeville Revue died with almost all his fortune gone.

He had been living in a rooming house with his wife, the former Helena Konisarjevska. His popularity reached its heights in the 1920's when he brought his intimate Muscovite Revue, with its merry parade of wooden soldiers, to the United States.

His inability to master the English language carried his audience into hilarious understanding and made him a popular master of ceremonies.

With eyes twinkling, the rotund, shy little man would step to the footlights and announce with a roar:

"Denickst nomber-r-r-r onde program: Sonx by Glinka, gret Ressian compser."

The jovial Balieff once was imprisoned by the Czar for producing a play satirizing the government. Later he suffered the same fate when he made fun of the Bolshevists.

Wrong timing ruined many of his plans, but he never seemed to care. He produced his last Chauve-Souris in 1934. His last engagement, in a large midtown hotel, terminated last spring.

Lehman Orders Milk Strike Parley

Albany, Sept. 4 (U.P.).—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman intervened tonight to prevent a threatened strike in New York's $2,000,000,0000 dairy industry, by summoning a public hearing Saturday September 12, to thrash out the controversial problem.

Lehman's action came as Central New York dairy leaderes prepared to call the "milk holiday" for next week, after failing to reach an agreement with distributors for higher prices.

The hearing will be conducted by Agriculture Commissioner Peter G. Teneych, who is authorized by law to establish minimum prices to both the producer and consumer.

Lehman said the hearing was for the purpose of discussing: The price to producer, the classifications and the control of prices to the consumer.

The dairy leaders demand a minimum of $3 per hundred pounds.

British Firm Builds Plane for Lindbergh

Newark, N. J., Sept. 4 (AP).—F. G. Miles, British airplane designer, said today that his firm was constructing for Col. Charles A. Lindbergh a light, two-seat, touring plane which is expected to be the fastest of its type in the world.

The firm, Phillips & Powis, specializes in speed planes. Miles' wife, who accompanied him today and is also an airplane designer, planned the ship with which Miles won the King's Cup race last year.

Mr. and Mrs. Miles, who arrived in New York on the Bremen today, flew on a commercial air line tonight toward Los Angeles. They were among many persons prominent in aviation going to the national air races.

Lack of Bridge Is Bemoaned By Harpers Ferry Residents

By Philip J. Austensen.

Harpers Ferry was made an economic island last March when the flood washed away its main connecting links with the world—the iron bridges over the Potomac and Shenandoah Rivers.

Harpers Ferry is still an economic island today, its tourist trade lost and most of its shops closed. The bridges that went out last March have not been replaced.

For months the 2,000 inhabitants of the historic West Virginia town have been promised new bridges. They have been told that work to make a railroad bridge able to accommodate motor vehicles would "start in a few days." Now the announcement "They are going to begin planking Monday" is a standing joke in the community.

"The town council has done everything in its power without result," Mayor Charles Marlatt said. "We have co-operated in every way we could. Our merchants are losing one-half of their business and maybe more. I have resorted to all the means I know without result.

"I'm just simply a little discouraged on the outcome of Harpers Ferry. The town has no source of revenue except taxation. We only receive half the revenue we formerly did, hardly enough to pay the overhead and even that is dwindling with the delay on the bridge forcing more merchants out of our town. The bakery that formerly served the neighboring areas here has moved to Charlestown. The Hilltop House has closed up. We have no summer hotel now. Other businesses are closing up with consequent loss of license revenue.

"I don't know what is holding up the temporary bridge. I have consulted lots of people, but no one seems to be in position to give a definite answer. The Baltimore & Ohio people say it is the State. The State says it is the railroad. The States and the Federal Government have just got this town practically isolated from the rest of the world."

Miss M. E. Doran, proprietor of one of the largest department stores which her grandfather founded in 1833 and who is one of the largest taxpayers in the town, told The Post:

"We're just bottled up here. It seems like an unnecessary delay, but I don't know what we can do about it."

William A. Walsh, proprietor of the other department store and a heavy taxpayer as well as a member of the town council, declared:

"It seems like it takes them a long time to do nothing. Here is the railroad bridge with nothing done. They are talking about it but they aren't doing anything. The only business here now is from the natives and that is not very much. They can't spend what they haven't got.

"There's a lot of talk about what's behind all of this delay. The Governor of Maryland gets the blame around here. The council has done all it can. The officials held big meetings at Hilltop House and promised all sorts of speed but when the meeting was over they forget all about it.

"We expected the temporary bridge to be up in April and here it is September. Why, the Federal Government could have done something about getting planks across that bridge out of all the money it is spending. Representative Randolph did a lot of talking about what he was going to do, but nothing has happened yet."

J. S. Dailey, funeral director, was even more outspoken:

"It's a hell of a situation," he declared. "Why, the other night in all that storm I had to drive 36 miles to answer an emergency ambulance call a mile over the bridge. I believe it is the politicians. Somebody is blocking the bridge and it's inconvenient to the public and it is being felt keenly by all of these people. I think it is unfair. They could have had it fixed in 30 days at the most. Look at that man pushing a wheelbarrow over the bridge. That's feed for his hogs. It's pretty tough, but the feed man can't deliver."

Louis Harrison, proprietor of a gasoline station and general store at the Harpers Ferry side of the demolished bridge, declared vehemently:

"It's a crime. Here we have a main thoroughfare between the West and the South and nothing has been done to fix that bridge. Every day motorists come here to find the bridge is still out. They get mad and I don't blame them.

"Most of our trade came from over in Maryland and Virginia. Now the Marylanders have to walk over the railroad bridge in the teeth of a cold wind and carry their stuff by hand and the Virginians can only get here by skiff and they can't carry heavy stuff that way."

Carroll B. White, town treasurer and proprietor of the White House Tavern, said:

"The bridges went out just as our season started. The season will be over after Labor Day. Somehow, I can't understand why we have been left in such a way when it would have been so easy to provide at least a temporary bridge to help ease the situation. We feel there is politics mixed up in the delay somewhere.

"It has been figured that it is costing the communities of this section $10,000 a day in lost trade. If something isn't done soon a lot of us are going to have to go out of business."

Mrs. White said they had been operating the tavern 14 years. "We have worked hard to keep up this place and it seems a shame that we have to lose our business now."

Alliance to Aid Relief Workers Is Recognized

Loses First Plea, However, for Employes on WPA Rolls.

By the Associated Press.

The Workers Alliance of America yesterday announced it had been recognized by the Works Progress Administration as a collective bargaining agency for relief workers, but that its demand for wage increases had been rejected.

David Lasser, president, simultaneously announced his organization had called a strike of 10,000 Minneapolis WPA workers, and said "this action is what the Administration must escape from their refusal to pay decent wages."

The alliance, which says it has 800,000 members among relief workers and the unemployed, had demanded that WPA wages be increased 20 per cent, with a $40-a-month minimum. Also rejected, Lasser said, were demands that the union hourly wage be paid, that workers be paid for time lost through no fault of their own, and that 1,000,000 additional WPA jobs be created or that direct relief allotments be resumed.

Lasser, who said the Workers Alliance would support strikes for higher relief wages, added:

"The Administration is taking a hypocritical attitude in admitting that wages are too low and yet not using its power to increase them. The outbreak of strikes on WPA will follow naturally from the unwillingness of 2,500,000 workers to starve while working."

With the Alliance already recognized as a collective bargaining agency for New York City WPA workers, Lasser said, "It will be necessary now to make sure that the recognition of the Alliance is given teeth by regulations that will insure no discrimination against workers because of organization activities."

The Workers Alliance, Lasser said, is in charge of a strike of WPA workers in Burlington County, N. J., which he said has affected several thousand workers.

1935 U. S. Jobless Is Set at 6 Million

New York, Sept. 4 (AP).—The New York Sun made public tonight its final report of a series numbering country "for the average year 1935" at 6,000,000 among the 51,000,000 workersof age 10 and older, and citing "great gains" in employment during 1936.

The report broke down its figures to show the total estimated unemployed in industry and thade was 3,593,000, comparing figures for 1929 and 1935 in manufacturing, trade, transportation, communiaction and mining.

"The survey does not cover the 22,000,000 other workers of the country who are in agriculture, the professions, governmental service and personal and domestic service," the report said. "As to these, the Sun offers an estimate, which it warns is not supported by definite figures, of 2,500,000.

"This would place total unemployment among the 51,000,000 workers, 10 years and older in the country, at 6,000,000 for the year 1935."

These reports seem to prove conclusively that there is no unemployment problem in some major industries, and in others it is not of any grave proportion," the Sun said.

'Eyeglass' Racket Suspect Seized

Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 4 (U.P.).—Postal inspectors today announced arrest of a man booked as Iddien Reese Conner, 42, alleged member of a ring whose "eyeglass racket" is said to have mulcted victims from Ohio, Louisiana and California of more than $300,000 in 10 years.

Conner's arrest and incarceration at Williamstown, Ky., preliminary to extradition to Texas, was revealed by Inspectors Joseph P. Nolan, Cincinnati, and C. W. Long, Dallas, Tex. Conner was said to be under indictment in Texas, Louisiana and California.

The "eyeglass racket" was used firsts, Nolan said. If the victims remained gullible, there were fake operations for removal of "cancerettes" from the eyes, application of a "radium" belt and other "treatments." The gang was said to have obtained $16,000 from a Californian for a spurious eye operation by a fake doctor.

School Girl Seized In Extortion Threat

Pittsburgh, Sept. 4 (AP).—Extortion notes scrawled in a schoolgirl's tablet led today to the arrest by Federal agents of Vera Appetta, 16, and her 21-year-old brother, James.

The Government men said the junior high school girl admitted she wrote two notes to C. Joseph Recht, Pittsburgh attorney, demanding he pay $5,000 "or die."

A United States commissioner held her under $500 bail to await a hearing tomorrow on a charge of attempted extortion. Her brother, accused of mailing the letters to Recht, was held under $1,000 mail.

Nude Man Takes Stroll In Downtown Baltimore

Baltimore, Sept. 4 (AP).—A nude man startled pedestrians today by walking calmly up the city's principal street.

Police soon overtook the unclad stroller and hustled him off to the station, where he was dressed and taken to a Washington hospital.

An Akron, Ohio, physician said the man was his brother, who had come here from Washington to be examined by a psychiatrist. The brother assisted officers in caring for the man.

Building at New Peak.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 4 (AP).—Record-breaking summer building activity has restored about half the $4,000,000 damage Helena suffered in last October's disastrous earthquakes, unofficial estimates indicated today.

More than 100 new dwellings have gone up to help alleviate the city's housing shortage; new buildings costing several hundred thousand dollars have been completed, and rehabilitation of damaged structures is being sped.

Portugal's Internal Peace Holds Key to Britain's Military Plans

Rumors of Spread of Spanish Revolt to Little Iberian Nation Represent Ominous Threat to Peace of Europe, Says Writer.

Rumors of the spread of the Spanish revolution to Portugal represent possibly a more ominous threat to the parlous peace of Europe than even the current activities of Italy and Germany on behalf of the Spanish rebels as opposed to those of Moscow and Paris supporting the loyalists. For, if Portugal becomes embroiled in Spain's Armageddon, Great Britain, who has announced that she will not take sides beyond the protection of her neutral rights, will be forced into at least indirect participation in a conflict which will thus move just that much closer to becoming "irrepressible."

Portugal is definitely a satellite power of the British, and it is well understood that her very existence depends on her close commercial relations with and her ancient military guarantees from Great Britain.

It is less well understood that these military guarantees are part and parcel of the historic British policy of guarding at all costs her life-line of Empire, the routes to India and Africa, and that, therefore, the military alliance is almost as important to Great Britain as it is to the tiny Iberian nation.

That the British government remains well aware of the importance of the treaty, however, was made abundantly clear in a recent seemingly innocuous and mildly whimsical announcement by the foreign office that "the Treaties of Alliance with Portugal, dating back to 1373," are still in effect and fully binding. The foreign office further camouflaged the significance of this announcement by gravely iterating that in case of need Britain must assist Portugal "with a warship carrying at least ten culverins," a culverin being an ancient type of cannon.

Interests In Common.

Aid to Portugal in the event of Portuguese revolution would undoubtedly be interpreted as aid to the present government which is extremely friendly to Great Britain. This government also rules those Portuguese islands, the Azores and Madeira, which lie directly athwart Britain's "long," or South Atlantic, route to India and South Africa. That the safety of this sea route has recently become a prime factor in empire strategy is amply demonstrated by admiralty plans to build at enormous cost a monster naval base near Cape Town, Union of South Africa. Present proposals indicate that this naval fortress, when completed, will rival the new and mighty British base at Singapore.

The old route to India by way of the Mediterranean and the Suez Canal is no longer surely defensible, as Italian might by sea and air grows apace. Britain plans unparalleled increases in her naval armament during the next five years; but meanwhile she remembers that Mussolini could and did ignore her opposition during the Ethiopian crisis in which the Mediterranean route was directly involved. England next month will hold full naval maneuvers in that sea in an attempt to impress the Duce with the fact that she still claims mastery of the sea; but even five years from now, with her new fleet completed, there will be no guarantee that fast Italian cruisers, fleet Italian torpedo-boats, plentiful Italian submarines and powerful Italian Caproni bombers can not, in the event of war, turn the old line of communications with India into a maritime shambles.

Great Britain's alternative lies around Africa past the Azores and Madeira, a route her ships also take in carrying on her large trade with the Argentine. Such a passage might be rendered untenable if the Portuguese Islands were to fall into the hands of an unfriendly government. Lest this point seem labored it is worth remembering that Great Britain could not have won her greatest naval victory of the World War (the outcome of Jutland is still a matter for debate), if she had not owned the Falkland Islands, which lie off the southeastern coast of the Argentine. There His Majesty's ships destroyed the German Pacific fleet commanded by Admiral von Spee in late 1914. The right to use Madeira and the Azores as temporary bases would make similar operations possible along the South Atlantic route.

Fear Italian Aid to Rebels.

For British purposes the ideal outcome of the Spanish revolution would be immediate and decisive victory for the rebels, a victory so quick that the insurgents would not feel obligated to Italy for aid given in gaining the success. A rebel victory made possible after a prolonged war by active Italian assistance is just what Mussolini hopes for. Such an outcome would place Italy in a position to demand as a return for services rendered the right to use the Spanish Tyrrhenian ports as naval and air bases; an outcome which would not only weaken Britain's already vulnerable position in the Mediterranean, but also would make very real the possibility of attack by air on Gibraltar from nearby points.

A government victory in Spain would probably lead to Communist or at least a very radical Socialist regime. Already the extreme left is furnishing most of the troops and leaders for the loyalists. Such a regime, which would probably be unfriendly, would be highly unwelcome to the British foreign office.

However, strong liberal and anti-Fascist opinion in the United Kingdom makes intervention on behalf of the rebels by the British government the opposite of feasible.

Portugal is another matter. Traditionally Britain is her ally. Britain has many times sent troops to aid the Portuguese in war; and, more than once, England has intervened in turbulent Portuguese politics to protect her special advantages and to insure a friendly government. The British-Portuguese treaties which last week were confirmed by the foreign office would afford an almost perfect pretext, in the event of revolution, for intervention to protect the existing regime.

During the Napoleonic wars Portugal sided with Great Britain, and it was an army composed of Portuguese and British commanded by Sir Arthur Wellesley, later Duke of Wellington, which performed most of the heavy work in driving Bonaparte's armies from the Iberian peninsula and administering to them their first serious setback. Again, during the World War, Portugal sided with the British and engaged in active military operations against Germany long before the latter declared war on her in March, 1916. During 1917 and 1918 Portuguese were among the troops to be found representing the Allies on the Western Front.

Portugal Economically Dependent.

Actually it would be immediately disastrous to Portugal to be aligned against Britain in war. Economically she is almost entirely dependent on the United Kingdom, and since the defeat of the Central Powers she has stood beside England in opposition to the claims of Germany that her former African possessions should be restored, claims which, it has often been suggested in European chancelleries, might be satisfied by presenting the Portuguese African colonies to the Reich.

Today the Portuguese government is frankly pro-rebel in the Spanish struggle, and since the main points on its Spanish border are held by the insurgents a large arms trade from all parts of the world is now being conducted through Portugal with the Spanish Fascists. This fact accounts for the strong representations from Russia that if there is to be any European neutrality agreement in regard to the Spanish revolution, Portugal must be included in the pact. Otherwise it would be perfectly possible for Germany and Italy to sell arms to Portugal as a neutral, and from the ports of that country war materials can easily be transshipped to the Spanish insurgents. Meanwhile precisely such a trade flourishes while the British foreign office cheerfully remains officially unaware of the matter.

In recent decades Portuguese history has consisted of an almost inextricable tangle of revolution and corrupt or incompetent regimes, both civil and military.

Today, as English squires sip magnificent port and madeira and solemnly congratulate each other on thus loyally supporting their "Portuguese Allies," the alert British foreign and admiralty offices keep careful watch lest the people of the little Iberian nation should become something else than "allies."

GreenConfirms Seattle Labor's Hearst Boycott

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, yesterday confirmed the action of the Seattle Central Labor Council in placing the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, owned by William Randolph Hearst, on the unfair list.

Green, however, added that he had directed Rowland Watson, A. F. of L. representative in Seattle, to "serve in every possible way in trying to bring about a settlement of the dispute existing between the management of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer and the members of the local Newspaper Guild, so that industrial peace may be re-established in the City of Seattle."

Watson's report to Green confirmed what American Newspaper Guild representatives had submitted to him previously, he said, adding that "in view of the fact that the Seattle Central Labor body conformed to the A. F. of L. laws and followed orderly and legal procedure, the federation cannot interfere."

In the released statement, Green reproduced a report from Watson, which apparently established that discharge of two members by the Post-Intelligences, bringing about the strike which has forced that newspaper to suspend publication indefinitely, was "for union activities." The newspaper had said they were discharged for insubordination and incompetence, although one had been a member of the staff for 17 years, and the other for 20.

Jurist Suggests Check on News In Connecticut

Ban on Out-of-State Reporters at Trials Urged Before Bar Group.

By the Associated Press.

Hartford, Conn., Sept. 4.—Asserting that freedom of the press has "its definite limits," Chief Justice William M. Maltbie of the Connecticut Supreme Court of Errors proposed tonight that newspapermen representing out-of-State publications be barred from trials in Connecticut courts.

He made his proposal at a dinner meeting of the Connecticut Bar Association following its two-day convention here, submitting a "definite program" governing the relationship between the courts and the press.

"No good purpose is served," said the chief justice in a prepared speech, "by admitting the representatives of individual newspapers outside the State, for they can get all the information which can be of general interest as to what takes place in court from the press associations."

The jurist contended "there should be a strict limitation upon the extent to which the representatives of the press should be admitted to our courtrooms," and said that any Connecticut judge who decides to put the program into operation "can rest assured that I will stand by his side and take my full share of the responsibility."

The chief justice proposed that attendance at trials be restricted to representatives of newspapers circulating or publishing in the community where the court is sitting or where the crime occurred and "perhaps under close restriction" to newspapers having a general circulation in the State.

"Beyond these," he said, "only a proper number of representatives of the great press associations should be admitted."

The Chief Justice recommended also that:

"While the court is in session no going and coming of messengers or runners should be permitted."

"No pictures should be made in the courtroom, either by camera or free-hand drawing * * * no radio equipment allowed."

Rock Island, Ill., Sept. 4 (AP).—Federal barge line traffic on the upper Mississippi River was resumed today, with a report by the Army engineers that three of the five boats which ply the river in this section are now operating again between St. Louis and St. Paul.
